KASHMIR AND ITS RESOURCES.

IT was lately said, in an Indian journal, that the "Maharajah of Kashmir has at last allowed a trial of the manufacture of champagne from the splendid vineyards in Kashmir. He has also reduced from Rs. 30 to Rs. 12 the tax paid by the shawl weavers. There are, it is stated, a number of projects which the Maharajah has in view, and which will soon be set going; the only difficulty is that he cannot get hold of proper European workmen. It is not unlikely that his Highness and son will visit Bombay and Madras some time next year."-"I am not aware," says a correspondent who knows something of Kashmir, "that any attempt has as yet been set on foot to make 'champagne' in the valley, and I imagine the announcement is somewhat premature; but I do know that his Highness has engaged the services of a French vinicole who proceeded to India some short time ago, with the view of utilising them in the cultivation of the vine, and, still better, of once more making the attempt to grow beet root for the production of sugar. I say 'once more,' for an attempt of the kind was commenced in 1852 or 1853 by Dr. Martin Honigberger, under the auspices of the founder of the family, Maharajah Goolab Sing. It was, however, not pushed to its legitimate end, and consequently died of inanity. It is sincerely to be hoped that this renewed effort to introduce a most useful cultivation will be more successful, for it will confer great benefits, not only on the inhabitants of the valley itself, but of the whole neighbouring hill country, where sugar may be looked on in reality as an expensive luxury, owing to the heavy charge for carriage from the plains into the mountainous country. Once the cultivation introduced, there is no reason why it should not extend further north, even to Yarkand and Kashgar. As to the number of projects in view, but difficult of introduction because the Maharajah cannot get hold of proper European workmen, there would be no difficulty at all if his Highness would address himself to such men as Dr. Forbes Watson or Dr. George Birdwood for assistance. They would, I am sure, afford every aid of the most efficient kind in their power." Hops are said by another correspondent "to be among the new introductions contemplated, and will, no doubt, thrive as well as would every other European staple-producing plant."

Amongst the recent announcements, regarding discoveries in his Highness's territories, one to the effect that Mr. W. H. Johnson, the joint commissioner on the part of the Government of Kashmir, had, while on a tour of inspection in the direction of Pera Meerov, found a gold mine near that place, and had brought with him some dust for analysis. Every careful reader of travels in the Himalayas by observant authors, Andrew Wilson, in his "Abode of Snow" for example, must have noticed the very general impression that prevails that the stupendous mountain range dividing off Central from Southern Asia not only produces, but must, in some localities, be a very field of gold; while the traditions of the Far East have it that the abundance of the precious metal is the real cause of the jealous exclusion of foreigners from the Tibetan territories so persistently enforced by the Chinese Government and their tributaries. The whole subject is one deserving of great attention. Could not Colonel Montgomerie start one or more of his exploring Pandits in search of the quarries whence the gold-carrying rivers, of the Punjab for example, obtain the washings they bring from their remote sources? It the shorter streams that rush through the southern valleys of Kashmir are also really gold-bearing, as is asserted, then the auriferous rocks must be much nearer the Northern confines of the great valley than has been hitherto supposed, and exploration might be more easy than if it had to be carried into the territories owing remote or direct allegiance to China.

Be this as it may, there are many more profitable sources of industry and wealth that should have the earnest attention of the Maharaja of Kashmir than seeking after gold, and we trust such attention will continue to be bestowed on the cultivation of silk, already a staple throughout the land, and other substances that should in time convert the Valley of Kashmir into that real mine of wealth that is rich without gold. Let the Maharaja steadily hold on in his present course of improvement, and success will be his reward.

The paragraphist whom we have quoted above concludes his budget by saying that the Maharaja might in all probability visit Bombay and Madras with his son some time next year. We trust this may be so, but we learn by the very last telegrams that it has been announced that the Governor-General proposes to visit Kashmir at the commencement of the coming winter, after holding a Court darbar at Lahor in the beginning of November. It seems to be arranged that his Excellency should first proceed to Jamu, and thence passing up the "Via Sacra" by the Barrihal Pass, enter the Valley from the east, where the glorious view spread at the feet of the traveller can only be compared to the wonderful sight of the Lake of Geneva displayed at the exit of the railway tunnel a little east of Lausanne. It is simply glorious.

Lord Lytton will no doubt place himself under the guidance of Major Henderson, who will show him especially the silk filature, now thriving beyond expectation under the able management of Baboo Nilambar Mukarji, the new carpet manufactory, recently established by a European gentleman under favourable auspices, the shawl weaving establishments that may receive a fresh impulse from the lowering of the tax on weavers mentioned above, and perhaps extend his visit up the beautiful Sind valley, and to the summit of the Takht-i-Soliman, passing out of the valley on board the elegant little steam launch presented by the British Government to the Maharajah as a token of high consideration for his advance on the highway towards civilising his people, and improving their condition wherever it may be possible to do so. The poetic fancies of the Governor-General may be called into fresh life by the scenery that will open out before him, though the season will not be so propitious as during the earlier part of the year. The progress will no doubt be a most interesting one, and we shall watch its results with much curiosity.

An obscure and, we trust, altogether unfounded, rumour has it that contemplated negotiations for the appointment of a permanent "Resident" at the Court of the Maharajah, on the same footing as "Residents" at other Courts, may be at the bottom of the foreshadowed visit, under the impression that personal intercourse and oral persuasions may be more successful than diplomatic correspondence. We cannot think The question was, to all intents and purposes, definitively settled, some two years ago, when, notwithstanding the urgent representations of Sir Henry Davis, supported by the strong recommendations of Lord Northbrook, the Marquis of Salisbury, taking into his careful and deliberate consideration the terms on which Kashmir and its dependencies were coded to Maharajah Goolab Singh, and the faithful services rendered by him and his son and successor to British interests during the sore days of the Indian rebellion, altogether ignored the proposition, as an untenable breach of faith, and determined "to let" the Maharajah "alone," and not to interfere in the slightest degree with the internal management of his deminions; well satisfied with the efforts that were being made for the improvement of the administration of the judiciary, and the relief of the people from the oppression exercised here and there by distant official authorities beyond the reach of supe-Besides, it is hardly to be supposed that any renewed action could emanate either in India or at the India-office on the basis of any new view of the case after so recent and apparently definitive a decision.

SILVER—IV.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

The Silver Market was quite disorganised on Friday. To make any sales in the afternoon, a very material reduction on Thursday's rate of 53d to 53dd, would have had to be submitted to. The exchanges came lower from the East. Messrs. Pixley and Abel's Circular mentions that the date for the next India Council drafts is as much as a fortnight before the usual period. This has doubtless influenced the market.—Allen's Indian Mail of 19th August.

SIR,—I infer from your Editorial, page 819, and from Lord G. Hamilton's speech of the 10th inst., that the Indian Government believes that the fall in the Indian Exchange is owing to the fall in the price of silver, and that the fall in silver is owing to a panic.

Now what is meart by a panic? Usually the cause of a panic is that large quantities of commodities are brought into the market, and sold recklessly by the owners, who have been seized with a sudden and groundless alarm. But with reference to the supposed panic in the silver market we are told on the best authority that but little silver has been offered for sale in the London market. The holders of silver, who are supposed to be suffering from a panic, are astute wide awake men; they are in no hurry to sell their stores of silver in London. What said Lord G. Hamilton regarding the quantity of silver in the London market? In his speech of the 10th inst. he indicates that Government is in the dark, and unable to see its way in financial matters:—"Perhaps the most curious feature in the whole of these operations was the small supply of silver in London. Any demand for silver raised the price, as the supply had on several occasions to be obtained from abroad."

Can the Government inform the public of the quantities of silver at present in the hands of the bullion merchants of Amsterdam and Frankfort-on-Mayn, and of the bond fide bullion transactions which have this year been carried on in those cities?

So much for the visionary panic. Next with reference to the remedies for the unprecedented oscillation in the Indian exchange during the past few months.

In former letters I have proposed two measures for steadying the rate of exchange:—1. That Government should borrow in London instead of drawing from India whenever the exchange falls below a certain rate. 2. That the export trade from India should be encouraged by setting free cash in India which is locked up. This can be done in various ways. By Government's retracing its false step taken in August last and buying back some of the rupee paper which it then blindly issued. The Under-Secretary of State for India, in his speech of the 10th inst., appeared to recognise the justice of your remarks on the 23rd August, 1875 (page 813). He alluded to

Digitized by Google

"The interest on the repurchase of Government rupee paper. the loan raised here over and above the amount estimated in India would be counterbalanced by the rupee paper which the Indian Government had bought." The tightness of the money markets in Calcutta and Bombay can also be relieved by Government's advancing money on bills of hypothecation of Indian produce exported. Lord George Hamilton, in his speech alluded to above, said:—"They had requested the Viceroy to endeavour to advance bills upon Indian produce, as an easier mode of remittance.

This is, in fact, recurring to the old system which was for many years adopted by the East India Company.

Another mode of easing the money markets in India, and of encouraging the export trade, would be by the issue of Rupee Exchequer Bills, issuable both in London and India, and payable in India on Dec. 15 and June 15, when the Government treasuries are full of coin; on Dec. 15 the merchants require money, on June 15 the agriculturists require it. Thousands of natives who now bury their hoards, or convert them into ornaments, would eagerly utilise their silver and gold in acquiring Exchequer Bills bearing moderate interest, and issuable in duplicate whenever the originals may have been burnt or otherwise lost. Such Exchequer Bills would be employed to a great extent in payment of the land tax.

In the present age we have to guard against the excessive power of millionaire capitalists. Many of your readers can form some idea of the ruin and misery caused by gambling in Turkish and other bonds, but stock-jobbers have always this excuse, that their victims are willing to gamble, and have the option of abstaining from doing so; of their own choice they incur risks.

But exchange-jobbers have no such excuse. Their victims have no option, no choice, for they have families at home for whom they must provide, and they have good reason to complain that Government has, during the past year, played into the hands of the speculators, first, by borrowing money in India which it could not use there; and, secondly, by suddenly refusing to issue India-office bills to the extent of nearly twenty millions of rupees, and thus greatly injuring the export trade from India.

And consider the numbers and services of the thousands who have been injured by the secret measures of the specula-Count up the numbers of families who have suffered heavy losses from having to pay the percentage exacted on remittances. Recollect that many of our fellow countrymen in India may be considered the flower of the nation by their many virtues, by their deeds of intrepid courage, by their high education, by their masterly statesmanship, and by their commercial and agricultural enterprise. All are ready to encounter disease and death not only in providing for their families, but in supporting and preserving the most wonderful Empire the world has probably ever seen. Why should the interests of our countrymen in India be sacrificed to an inordinate lust of wealth, conceived by a limited number of men who have already riches a hundredfold greater than they will ever spend? Why should the criminal ignorance of the Indian Government be permitted to chill the loyal zeal and cause disgust in the minds of the best of her Majesty's servants ?

Let us take warning from the history of Rome, which in B.C. 146 was fast losing the unselfish loyalty that thought only of the Republic, and the patriotism that gave way to ambition and to the lust of wealth.

Not only was free scope allowed with criminal indulgence to the unscrupulous greed of the Roman merchant in the provincial administration, but even the commercial rivals who were disagreeable to him were cleared away by the armies of the State, and the most glorious cities of neighbouring lands were sacrificed, not to the barbarism of the lust of power, but to the far more horrible barbarism of speculation.—Page 69, vol. iii., of Mommsen's "History of Rome."

Your obedient servant,

August 22.

P.S.—In continuation of my letter of yesterday's date I beg to call your attention to a letter in the Money Market Article of to-day's Times, from which I give an extract :-

It is by no means clear, therefore, why our India Council should show such precipitate haste in endeavouring to stiffe our Indian exchanges when they showed evident signs of recovery. Their action has been universally condemned by every one capable of giving an opinion on the subject. By way of palliation it is stated that the gentlemen composing the Indian Finance Committee have had but few opportunities of mastering this intricate subject, having mostly occupied military, judicial, and police appointments in India; but if such be the case it is indeed tune that some thorough change should be effected in the financial administration of our India off c because not only does the Indian Exchequer suffer severely, but our whole Asiatic commerce appears to be completely paralysed owing to the uncertainty of exchanges.

INDIAN PUBLIC WORKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Allow me to offer the following explanation in answer to certain remarks in your paper of the 19th inst., in which you say, referring to my pumphlet:—"Mr. Dacosta does not show sufficient cause for his statement about the unproductive character of Indian Public Works, such as railways and canals." My statements on the subject were to the effect that the earnings of the works in question were insufficient to cover the interest on the sums expended in their construction, and that many of the irrigation schemes had resulted financially in a most disastrous manner. Against these statements, which were made on the authority of official documents, some of which were specially mentioned in the pamphlet, you place Lord G. Hamilton's assertion "that the capital outlay on Public Works and Guaranteed Railways already yields nearly 4: millions, or something over 4 per cent. a year;" and you assume this assertion to rest "on better grounds" than the statements made in my pamphlet. The following remarks will show how far this conclusion is justified:

In the Under-Secretary's speech, the cost and the net revenue of the works in question are set down at the following figures:-

Cost. Net Revenue. ... £94,000,000 ... £3,470,000 Guaranteed Railways ... ... 14,000,000 State Railways Irrigation Works 118,000 708,000 £125,000,009 ... £4,296,000

From the above it will be seen-

I.—That the earnings of the guaranteed railways fall short by £1,260,000 of the sum of £4,730,000, which is payable as interest on their capital.

II.—That for the State railways, while we have to pay £560,000 of interest (viz., 4 per cent. on £14,000,000), they earn only £118,000, and we have therefore to borrow the remaining £438,000, creating thereby a new and permanent charge on the revenues of the country. When the State railways are completed their earnings will doubtless be proportionately larger than they are at present; but there is no reasonable ground to expect that they will prove financially more successful than the old lines, seeing that, while their construction has been less costly, they are light railways, unfit for the same amount of traffic, and they moreover run through sandy tracts and countries comparatively barren and thinly populated.

III .- As regards the canals, it will be observed that while the Under Secretary sets down their net revenue at £708,000, the Budget Statement introduced by him gives only £527,000, as the figure of the gross revenue, and mentions that the working expenses of a portion of the works amounts to £264,512.

Some serious error would therefore appear to exist in the figures stated by the Under Secretary as representing the net earnings of the irrigation works; and this impression is confirmed by the statement recently published in a Blue-book (East India Finance and Revenue) to the effect that the net earnings of the irrigation works in operation in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces (where most of the money has been spent) fell short of the simple interest on their capital to 31st March, 1875, by no less a sum than £1,475,051. If this be so, the works are certainly not entitled to be classed as reproductive, and unfortunately there is no reasonable ground to look for less unfavourable results from most of the irrigation works that are now under construction.

With regard to Ordinary and Extraordinary Expenditure, I agree with you in thinking that reproductive works should be constructed with borrowed money, and not included in the ordinary expenditure of the State. My reason for dealing otherwise with the three years reviewed in the Budget statement and for adopting the figures of the Economist, was that much of what had been placed under the head of Public Works Extraordinary did not appear to me, under the circumstances mentioned above, to be entitled to that distinction.

My letter of the 16th inst., which you were good enough to publish, has already replied in anticipation to the remarks that have reference to the inelasticity of the Indian revenue.—
I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
J. DACOSTA.

THE EXCHANGE QUESTION.

The Englishman thinks that the official announcement through the Deutche Bank, contained in a recent telegram, has a most important bearing on the present silver question. The German Government, being interested in sustaining the price of silver, would, no doubt, be more likely to underestimate, than overestimate, its saleable stocks of that metal. Still, making every allowance for this consideration, we may now fairly conclude that the amount of German silver liable to be thrown on the market is not much more than half what, even according to the most moderate estimates, it had been reckoned at, while the stock actually available is very trifling. As the supplies from America are still small, it is difficult, under these circumstances, to account for the extraordinarily low price of the metal; and we cannot but regard that price as a panic price, which must inevitably rise now that the incubus of the German stocks has been placed in a less formidable light. We do not, however, expect that the rise will be very great at present, for even seven and a half millions sterling of German silver are likely to weigh heavily on the market, unless some unforeseen demand arises; and it is evident that, notwithstanding Colonel Berton's report we as yet know nothing certain of the capabilities of the Nevada mines. A rapid rise to fifty pence, and then a much slower rise to fifty-four, or fifty-six pence, may probably be looked for. In any case, we think it may be safely considered that prices have seen their lowest limit. Indeed, all but the very richest mines must, sooner or later, have stopped working with silver at 47d. an ounce, and this would have reduced supplies to the level of three or four years ago. The obvious policy of the Secretary of State now is to strain every nerve to reduce the home charges; suspend the coinage of silver; and, as soon as exchange reaches a steady level —i.e., as soon as it is equated with the local purchasing power of the rupce-commence coining gold at that rate.

THE VICEROY ON THE FULLER CASE.

The Madras Mail had hoped that contact with the world, and a study of the tact of its great rulers, would have deterred a man of Lord Lytton's ability from going out of his way to express his abhorrence "of the practice, instances of which occasionally come to light, of European masters treating their native servants in a manner in which they would not treat men of their own race." Can his Excellency imagine for a moment that he is gifted with a greater capacity to sympathise with native servants than his predecessors in office were gifted with; or does he suppose that his countrymen change their natures when they come to the East? He states that he considers that "the habit of resorting to blows on every triffing provocation should be visited by adequate legal penalties," and he, therefore, implies that, in his opinior, the existing law in the country is "inadequate," which is scarcely a compliment to pay to those who are responsible for that law. It is not necessary, however, to proceed with a scrutiny of the Order. We give his Lordship credit for every good intention; we do not for a moment doubt the genuineness of his indignation; but we disapprove of the action he has taken, since it is an encroachment on the legitimate authority of those subject to his orders, and is especially deplorable in respect to its liability to widen the gulf between the paramount and the subject races in this country. It virtually casts a slur on all Europeans in India, for it implies the necessity of the Viceroy making a formal protest against a "habit" that old residents are aware has long since died out. When his Excellency has cut his Viceregal wisdom teeth, and learned more by personal observation of governors and governed, he will probably regret having put on record so indiscrect an Order as that which will be handed down to posterity as among the first of his individual utterances.

The Englishman holds that not only was the sentence inflicted by Mr. Leeds consistent with both law and precedent, but an exemplary sentence would have been unjust, as attaching to Mr. Fuller's offence an ex post facto liability. Such a sentence could have proceeded only on one of two principles, both equally illegitimate and unjust. It must have proceeded either on the principle that punishment should be proportional to the unforeseen and unforseeable consequences of an act—a principle of penal liability not recognised by the law; or it must have treated a slap on the face as an act of culpable negligence, dangerous to human life—a principle of classification which, if legal, has not hitherto been recognised in practice. If there was any ground for indignation in the circumstances of the case, it was for indignation not with the Joint Magistrate for his undue leniency, nor with the High Court for endorsing it, nor with the local Government for its non-interference, but with a state of law and practice which does not recognise diseased spleen in native as a physical fact sufficiently prevalent to attach to the most ordinary assault of a native a degree of penal liability not belonging to it in the case of more healthy races. That this fact ought to be recognised, we think, scarcely admits of question; and it can be recognised only by enhancing the punishment for common assault, whenever death results from it in consequence of this condition. Both in tone and substance, the Viceroy's minute strkes us as most unfortunate.

THE INDIA MUSEUM.

The Times of India thinks it is indeed high time that that splendid collection were lodged in a manner befitting its intrinsic value and its national importance. Hitherto the chief anxiety of the authorities seems to have been to render it as little available as possible for imparting public information or for gratifying public curiosity.

On being removed from Leadenhall-street the Museum was transferred to Fife House, which could not on any account be considered a suitable building for its reception; while it must be borne in mind that in those days Fife House occupied an obscure position in London, being hemmed in on all sides and approachable only from the direction of Whitehall-yard. When the present India-office was completed, the Museum was removed thither, and meanly lodged in the attics of that building. Innumerable flights of steps acted as an effectual deterrent to the public in any troublesome desire they might manifest to view the exhibition in its new retreat. Moreover, the limits allotted to the collection in its airy abode were so contracted that only a portion of its varied treasures could be submitted for inspection. About a couple of years ago an agreement was come to between the Secretary of State for India and her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibitions of 1851, by which the East India collection was to be transferred, for a period of three years, to the eastern galleries of the late International Exhibition at South Kensington, where they now are. In a pamphlet lying before us, written by Dr. Forbes Watson, we find it stated—"The space thus provided will for the first time allow of the exhibition of the whole of the collections. It will also give the opportunity for their classification and arrangement." For years past the Director of the India Museum has been urging on the Secretary of State for India the necessity of nas been urging on the Secretary of State for India the necessity of erecting a special building for the reception of the valuable collections entrusted to his care. We are glad to observe that Dr. Forbes Watson is no longer left to fight the batte single-handed. In the pamphlet which we have just quoted, we read further on—"The Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom recognising the practical importance to this country, as well as to India, of a properly organised Museum and Library, have submitted memorials to her Majesty's Government, urging, on commercial and political grounds, the expediency of providing a suitable building for the various collections. pediency of providing a suitable building for the various collections, and recommending that as England benefits equally with India by the existence of such a Museum, assistance from Imperial funds should be given to attain this object." We wish Dr. Forbes Watson every success in his highly important undertaking.

THE PERAK CAMPAIGN.

The Pioneer observes that the campaign against the Malays in Perak is now a thing of the past, and though it was quite as worthy of notice as several little wars of late years, it attracted almost no attention, for several reasons. The Prince of Wales out here absorbed most of people's attention during the time it was being carried on, while the Eastern question at home occupied the nation and the papers. We hear now from a reliable source that it has been decided not to give a medal for Perak, and at a meeting of the authorities to discuss the question it is stated as a fact that one very high in power gave his reasons for not granting a medal, that "it was not sensational enough, and it was not a fashionable campaign." Probably had Perak been within ten days of London, and had Sir Garnet Wolseley been in command, this reason would not have been put forward. There is no doubt the troops employed in Perak had very severe work to do, and if there was not much actual fighting there was plenty of hardship and exposure to encounter. Of the numbers who received medals for Abyssinia, Ashantee, Lushai, and the Black Mountain, how few were there who ever saw a shot fired or an enemy even. It seems unfortunate for the sake of the troops that the forces should have been drawn from two distinct Governments, viz., India and China, as no doubt there has been a want of accord in putting forward the claims of the troops engaged. Policy would also seem to indicate the giving of a medal, as the Goorkhas were for the first time asked to cross the kala panee, and it would be a graceful act to give these brave little warriors a decoration, in remembrance of their good and willing services in an unknown land. In Ashantee the arrangements for transport were conducted by special officers, in Perak each column had to organise its own. Again, the medical arrangements were very imperfect, and the sick had anything but suitable diet, while the number of medical officers was altogether too few for efficiency. The troops were fed in a most gaiters. It is true they got compensation for injury to clothing, but this boon is more than counteracted by the ungenerous attempt to make the troops pay for the rum ration which was promised them free, which was actually issued as a prophylactic on the recommendation of the medical authorities, and which was given gratis in Ashautee. We hope, then, some recognition of the services of the Perak field force will be made, and no doubt if the feelings of those engaged are consulted, it would take the form of a medal in preference to batta or any other remuneration; the precedents are numerous, and there are many men wearing medals who did not earn them half as well as did the Perak field force.

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, July 22.—Of course, as usual, there is a talk of Simla being deserted. The rainfall is progressing fairly, but we are still a little behind the mark; but as the water supply of Simla for next year depends, not so much on the present rainfall as on the amount of snow which the winter may bring, there is no great cause for presnow which the winter may oring, there is no great cause for present anxiety. There is really no established theory which can prophesy the kind of winter we shall have, so we must wait patiently. But, as it is, the cost of converting the present Government resort into a healthy and convenient station would be far less than the into a healthy and convenient station would be far less than the amount necessary for establishing a new one, so we may feel happy on the subject. In a special point of view the winter up here is likely to be a pleasant one. We hear that the Viceroy's trip is to extend beyond the frontier. In fact, a tour into the "Happy Valley" is really contemplated. As it is expected that the whole of the Viceregal family will accompany his Excellency, the marches will probably be neither long nor rapid so that January and even will probably be neither long nor rapid, so that January, and even February, has been suggested as the earliest date by which Calcutta may hope to see the Government established in her palaces. The return route is said to pass Peshawur, Mooltan, and back via Bom-That there is to be a drawing-room to be held in Calcutta is not a very attractive idea to many, and I hear that a large proportion of those usually believed to be birds of passage will hybernate in the seclusion of Simla, and as dulness is the only accusation that can be brought against this place in the winter, even this reproach may not exist this year. The climate up here until February is faultless, and when one has got so far over the winter one can endure the short time that clapses e'er April smiles in genial beauty o'er the road, transforming with her fairy touch the dreary hill side into floming slopes of flowery loveliness. But it would be hardly worth while to move the whole of the Government offices down to Calcutta for a month or two, and of course for communication sake.
While the Viceroy is in Kashmir, Simla is a more convenient abode for Government than Calcutta. Mr. Inglis, I find, has not yet left Simla, as was reported. As to the Punjab Government, there seems August was the last date named. Simla must be very attractive this year, for neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Governor-General's agent seem able to descend from the much-abused heights of Jacko. There are no fresh rumours of appointments, and I think I have come to the end of the Simla gossip, so I must finish off.— Times of India Correspondent.

Inspector-General of Police, Bengal.—In consequence of the resignation of Colonel Pughe, Mr. Herbert Hankey is confirmed in his officiating appointment as Inspector General of Police in Bengal.

TEA PROSPECTS IN DARJILING.—With regard to tea prospects, the Darjiling paper says:—"A few bright sunny days are much wanted for tea in this district. The almost constant rain has resulted in the leaf being generally watery and wanting some of the strength which it had at the beginning of the season. Very pretty tea is being manufactured as a rule, and it is flavoury, but wanting, perhaps, in pungency."

Major Hewett.—The Lucknow correspondent of a contemporary says that Major Hewett, late of the Oudh Commission, is to be tried by court-martial for the business which brought about his removal from the Commission—borrowing from the Raja of Manpura. Major Hewett is at Meerut, where, it is supposed, the court-martial will assemble. Colonel Steel, Deputy Commissioner at Baraich, is to prosecute.

THE PRINCE OF OUDH.—The Woolyhad, the eldest son of the ex-King of Oudh, arrived in Lucknow on Monday last. The principal men of the city went to the railway station to receive him, and to welcome him to the capital of his ancestors. The prince will remain there for a fortnight. He is being entertained by the sister of the ex-King of Oudh, the prince's mother in-law.—Bombay Gazette, August 4.

Accident.—An accident happened to Mr. C. F. Amery, Deputy Conservator of Forests, N.W.P., which but for the presence of mind of that gentleman might have proved fatal to him. He was riding somewhere near Bugerathee, Dehra, when his horse suddenly shied and went over the side of the mountain path. To throw himself off the saddle was the affair of a moment, and Mr. Amery just started on his feet to see the faithful animal, a Yarkandi, roll down the Khud, at the bottom of which its lifeless body was shortly afterwards found.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

CIVIL.—The promotions in the Civil Service caused by the death of Mr. C. Grant. late judge of Banda, have fallen to the lot of Messrs. Benson, C. Robertson, Mackintosh, and Smeaton. Mr. Benson becomes a district judge, and doubtless will be posted at Banda, when relieved of his acting appointment as judge at Benares by the substantive incumbent, Mr. Brodhurst, who will return to India in a few days. Mr. C. Robertson becomes a Magistrate and Collector, and Mr. Mackintosh and Mr. Smeaton are confirmed in their offices in the Secretariat, which they have for some considerable time held in an officiating capacity.

THE DEPARTURE OF MR. JUSTICE PHEAR.—Good men and true must always have their rewards. Mr. Justice Phear, who has done so much to uphold British justice in India by his honest, fearless, and impartial administration of it, is going to be honoured by every branch of the profession of the law, including the European and the Native Bar practising on both sides of the Bengal High Court, and also the attorneys. The Calcutta Bar are going to entertain him at a dinner. The vakeels and attorneys of the Court are going to present him with addresses and also to testify their esteem for him otherwise. On Monday next the Calcutta Bethune Society, of which he has been the distinguished President for a long time, will hold a special meeting in his honour. The native community of Bengal, who have special reasons to be grateful to Mr. Phear, ought to do something to show their mark of respect for him on the eve of his departure from this country.—Indian Micror.

The Afridis.—The Lahor paper publishes the following frontier news:—"The Afridis of the Kohat border continue to be lively, and are keeping the good people of Kohat on the quivive. It is reported that they have killed two British subjects in the Government garden adjoining the cantonment. The correspondent of the Lawrence Gazette, a vernacular paper published at Meerut, says that they also fired on a party of police escorting the Deputy Commissioner's baggage, and that the escort deserted their charge and fled; but this seems to be very improbable. Also that they are fortifying the pass with 'Sungurhs' or breast-works constructed of stones and brushwood, and boast of having combined to bring 40,000 fighting men into the field with the help of the other tribes of the adjacent hills, whenever it may be necessary for them to resist the advance of a British force into their pass or territory."

THE RATE OF EXCHANGE—The Chamber of Commerce insists that to reduce the heavy loss which the Government, with so many others, is suffering from the present exchange, it should put an end to the competition between the silver market in London and the silver rupee in India by closing one of the two markets, so throwing the whole force of what Indian demand there may be for the metal on the other. It should either refuse to sell any more Council draftsin other words any more silver in the Indian treasuries-or should close the European silver market to the Banks, by withdrawing the right to get the silver coined at the Indian mints. The most effective course will be the latter, while it has this recommendation, that it would be an approach to a sounder system of currency than we We are simply asking the Government to do what Russia, now have. Germany, Holland, and the countries of the Latin Convention are all Not one of these countries is doing what we are unwisely doing. They all regard coinage as a matter of State discretion, while we unwisely allow it to be a matter of private convenience to the Banks and bullion dealers. We do not wish the Government to announce that it will coin no more silver, but that when it resumes minting, it will be as a matter of State discretion, and not of private right as now .- Calcutta Statesman.

The Kulu Mines.—The Agra paper tells us that "there is still some doubt to whom the leases of the Kulu mines will be granted. The facts are briefly these. When the Government indicated its intention of granting new leases, or shortly afterwards, the former lessee, whose interest in the project was only one-sixth share, coolly notified to the other shareholders that, under the new leases, he intended ignoring the engagements he had entered into with them. This was rather too much, and Government, being appealed to, ordered that all interests in the new leases should be precisely the same as in the old leases. The lessee then became an insolvent in Calcutta, notwithstanding which the Government seemed inclined to issue the new leases to him, appending to them a copy of his agreement with the other shareholders, to prevent his raising money elsewhere, as he had threatened to do. The agent who had come out from England on behalf of the shareholders protested against this, pointing out the absurdity of granting leases containing covenants to pay rent, and to expend money upon works, to an insolvent, who would be utterly powerless to fulfil them; and applied for the leases in his own name, on behalf of the shareholders in general, engaging to respect the former lessee's interests, the London shareholders being wealthy merchants, able to fulfil any engagements they might contract. The matter is, we hear, still under the consideration of the Government of India."

A STATUE TO SIR W. MUIR.—The statue to Sir William Muir, which is to be erected in the Alfred Park by a Committee headed by the Maharajah of Benares, is altogether an expression of native feeling, and cannot but be a genuine expression of feeling. Sir William Muir will soon be leaving this country for good, and nothing of the gratitude which springs from a sense of favours to come can have prompted the present movement. The statue, therefore, will be an unequivocal record of the fact that the influential native population of the North-West have recognised in Sir William Muir a ruler who honestly sought to promote their welfare. As Moulvi Syud Ahmed said at the Benares meeting, the object of those present was not to review the late Lieutenant-Governor's administration, but "to recall his friendship and love towards individuals, and his civility and kindness towards the public." That Sir William was a friend to the natives his most factious crities will not deny. Indeed, that friendliness, clashing sometimes with the interest of Europeans in the service over which he presided, was thought sometimes to be too prominent in his policy. However, it would be late in the day to discuss that point now. That the native population should look back on his régime with regret is very natural, and, as we say, the character of the proposed memorial is quite in harmony with the fitness of things, as it will, we feel sure, be peculiarly gratifying to the distinguished officer whose career it will commemorate. We may go further, indeed, and applaud the present undertaking from the purely European point of view.—Pioneer.

News from Kabul.—The following Kabul news appears in our Lahor contemporary:—"Our Dera Ismail Khan correspondent informs us that a traveller just arrived from Kabul states that Sur-forms us that a traveller just arrived from Kabul states that Surfuraz Khan, father-in-law of the late Ameer Azim Khan, has been a tempting to excite disaffection amongst the people by saying that the Ameer Sher Ali intended to give over the country to the Eng-1sh, and that he had ordered two cantonments to be laid out for the English troops coming, and that when this took place the condition of the people would become very bad, as after the Ameer should have levied his taxes the British Government would levy their own over again. On hearing this the people of Logri, Pansharie, and Hissarki became very excited, and would have broken into tumult, had not information been brought by a special messenger to the Ameer, who gave orders that Surfaraz Khan should be seized and brought to him. Surfaraz Khan, however, managed to elude his pursuers, on hearing which the Ameer promised the rank of General and a reward of 2,000 rupees to any one who should capture him; and to appease the people the following officers, Sirdars Gulam Nuksband, Ahmud Ali, and Kadeer Khan were despatched by the Ameer to explain matters, and to assure the people that they had been grossly deceived. Shahmurd Khan, Governor of Jellalabad, has sent intimation to the Ameer that the Khans of Bajour refuse to pay taxes any longer, and has requested that troops may, therefore, be sent against them to punish them. The Kakurs are said to be on the point of fighting with the Looni Alighans, and have appointed Swasara as the place they intend to Sirdar Abdul Rahman Khan, son of the late Ameer Afzul Khan, is said to have asked permission from the Russians to invade Turkistan, and in the event of their allowing him he also asked for a supply of arms and men. He was refused permission, but the Sirdar is said to have taken 500 horse with him, and to have gone out on his own hook on a plundering expedition to the banks of the Amoo Darya."

THE FULLER CASE.—An occasional correspondent, in weak health, writes as follows to the Pioneer, on the Fuller case :- " I do not take the smallest interest in Mr. Fuller. My sympathies, even if solicited, would be withheld from a person who pulls his servant's hair and then goes to church. But I have three objections to his Excellency's letter, although I would preface them with saying that no doubt can exist of the high-minded purpose which dictated it. I.—His Excellency has throughout treated the matter as a race question. He supposes that Mr. Leeds, the High Court, and his Honour have all viewed the offence of Mr. Fuller leniently, because he was a European, or passing as such. But this I believe to be a suspicion entirely without foundation. II.—The following sentence in his Excellency's letter involves surely an unintentional sophism:—'In Mr. Fuller's case while the provocation was exceedingly small the hurt was death.' It must be remembered that the argument requires the word 'hurt' here to mean 'voluntary hurt;' now I submit that 'a voluntary hurt of death' must be culpable homicide, and the only question can be whether it amounts to murder. haps the nearest analogy to Mr. Fuller's offence would be knocking a man down in the street, and thus causing him to be run over by a man down in the street, and thus causing into the erin over by an omnibus. The tendency of Hindus to spleen complaints is a moral reason against striking them, not a legal one, unless the existence of disease was known to the striker. If it is a physiological fact, the cole which was made for India ought to have taken it into consideration. But it has not done so. III.—I object in toto to his Excellency implying that servant-beating was formerly a commoner offence. There are obvious reasons why the introduction of a lower class of Europeans should have led to the greater prevalence of the misconduct. The English gentleman in India, of education and high feeling, never raised his hand against a native. And there lies the mistake of so many who come out fresh to this country; they suppose that the misdemeanours of a few roughs indicate a tone of public feeling. I am quite sure that Mr. Leeds, the Judges of the High Court, and his Honour view the beating of natives in exactly the same light in which his Excellency views it. And yet of course we shall hear in the home papers of the lesson taught the Anglo-Indian community by a nobleman bringing a fresh European mind to the consideration of the relations between the conquering and the conquered races."

AUSTRALIA AND THE TITLE OF EMPRESS OF INDIA.—The Melbourne Argus makes the following remarks relative to the assumption by her Majesty of the title of Empress of India: - We are sure that the people of these colonies feel themselves quite unable to express their gratitude for the speeches of those members of the House of Com-mons who opposed the Royal Titles Bill, on the ground that the elevation of her Majesty to Imperial dignity might give umbrage to her colonial subjects. It is gratifying, in so prosaic an age at the subjects. to find some of the law-makers of Great Britain gifted with such ardent imaginations, and at the same time crediting us with the possession of such delicate susceptibilities. We can appreciate the compliment, even while modestly acknowledging that it is wholly undeserved; for candour compels us to confess that, so far as our knowledge of public opinion in this colony extends, and so far as we can gauge that of our neighbours, as reflected in the principal news-papers of New South Wales, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, Western Australia, New Zealand and—we may venture to add—Fiji, nobody's sensibilities have been wounded by the addition of 'Empress of India' to the style and title of our gracious sovereign. We have so long been accustomed to regard ourselves as constituent portions of a great empire, are so habituated to entertain and encourage Imperial sentiments, and are so completely emancipated from the custom of looking at really national questions from the insular and parish-vestry point of view, that the title 'Empress' is very far from being a 'word of fear' to Australian colonists. Our loyalty is rendered to institutions, and not to epithets—to the person of the sovereign, and not to the inscription on a mohur or a rupee. Whatever may have been the occult cause of so remarkable a perturbation of public feeling in the mother country, we can only hope that it will have subsided by the time these lines meet the eyes of our English readers, that they will have made the discovery that their worst apprehensions have been falsified, and that the English Constitution has sustained no perceptible damage by the addition of Empress of India to her Majesty's titles. In the meantime we beg to reiterate the assurance that the incident which raised so violent a tempest there did not give rise to the slightest ripple on the placid surface of loyal feeling and patriotic sentiment in the Australian

THE KOHAT AFRIDIS.—Our Rawal Pindi correspondent, writing on July 18, says:—After an interval of monotonous quiet, which had the effect of causing us almost to forget that there existed a misunderstanding between ourselves and our turbulent neighbours, the Afridis, they startled us on the morning of the 15th current into a state of painful consciousness on that score, by making a success ful attack on a party sent out from the garrison at Kohat to bring in a supply of water. The party consisted of an escort of two sowars and two sepoys, with several bhisties and half a dozen mules. They were attacked within a mile of one of the outposts; the Afridie, who were in perdu, fired a volley, which knocked both the sepoys over. They then rushed on the remainder of the party, who, it would appear, being outnumbered and taken by surprise, took to their heels, leaving the mules as booty for the Afridis. These latter gentry possessed themselves of the rifle and accourtements of one of the sepoys who had died from the shot he had received, and with the mules effected a safe retreat into the hills. It was a good morning's work, and one can imagine how satisfied the Afridis must have felt at having executed the same so thoroughly, and with such ease, notwithstanding that they had brave, disciplined British sepoys to contend with. The village people and police of course gave chase, but were too late to retrieve the fortunes of the day, the Afridis not deigning to wait for them. The whole case is being carefully investigated by the authorities, and it is to be hoped some comfortable and reassuring conclusion will be arrived at. To those without the pale of officialdom, however, this coup de main is discouraging, and appears anything but indicative of an improved state of affairs; either the Afridis are of an extraordinarily elastic temperament, or our efforts at bringing them into submission by means of the block-ade have proved ineffectual; the latter I am inclined to opine is the truth. It is very confidently stated here that an expedition will be organised against the Afridis this cold season, and it is only that that will produce any good effect, although, knowing the character of these people, I fear they will always regard the project of a road through the pass with the utmost jealousy, and if ultimately accomplished, they will lose no opportunity of making use of the same. The road will weaken their position, and it is therefore nowise surprising that they should be so strenuously opposed to its being made.—Times of India.

THE HEAT IN THE PUNJAB .- In the Punjab generally, this summer, the heat appears to have been moderate until towards the end of June. There had been an occasional hot day or two, enough to give one an idea of what the heat could be, but relief soon came with a dust-storm or a shower of rain. Such had been the case at Peshawar, which is comparatively shut in by the mountains. By the 3rd of July the well-known heat-haze shut out the mountains from the sight at Peshawar. It is commonly said there that so long as the mountains near the Kaibar and other parts of the mountains which bound the valley are visible, the heat is moderate. After the third the heat went on increasing, until it became most trying even to the hardiest, and many cases of heat-stroke occurred among the troops, the first fatal case occurring in the 8th (the King's) Regiment. In the other European (the 51st) Regiment some fifteen cases were admitted, but the mortality does not appear to have been great. Natives also were struck down by the terrible heat. It is stated that even in a room cooled by a thermantidote the thermometer showed a temperature of 96° Fahr.; and that at night the temperature scarcely fell at all. In a mess-room during dinner, the temperature is stated to have been 102° Fahr., long after sunset. Other stations, in and near the Peshawar valley, experienced similar weather, such as seldom has been felt. At Nowshera out of a small garrison, the result was some six deaths among the Europeans, besides a number of natives, who were said to have died on the road. A party of invalids were being conveyed in doolies to Cherat, and six of the dooly-bearers were stricken down and died. At Attok—a very hot station—situated on and surrounded by rocks and rocky hills, at the entrance of the Peshawar valley, several cases of heat-stroke occurred in the European garrison of under two hundred men, three of them proving fatal.

The only medical officer in the station was seized, but recovered. It is said that the thermometer in the hospital there stood above 100° Fahr. for several days, scarcely falling at night. At Peshawar thermantidotes have now been sanctioned for use in barrack rooms; and some fifty were ready for issue some days ago. Even at Murree, at about 7,500 feet above the sea-level, the heat during this time was uncomfortable, and the weather altogether relaxing. Rain-clouds hung about the mountains for days, but discharged no rain, until the 8th July, when rain was ushered in by a violent thunderstorm. The air is much cooler, but "muggy." Rain has fallen every day in heavy showers since the 8th, and yet the clouds seem as much charged with rain as ever. Murree is not so well filled this year as usual, partly owing to the absence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The usual gaieties of the station seem not unlikely to be marred by the appearance of cholera in the station. This disease has lately been epidemic in Kashmir; and its progress towards Punjab borders has been watched. The authorities had established a sort of quarantine at Kohala, on the Jhelam, on the border of the Kashmir territory, two marches from Marri. English travellers were allowed to pass into British territory; but their native servants were detained for eight days. How far this plan was productive of good may be questioned; but the important fact is that two fatal cases of cholera are officially announced as having occurred at Marri on the 15th. They were two children of European parents. Two more seizures have occurred,—natives. It is said that in all these cases there is traceable communication with people from the infected districts beyond our border. Up to the 19th inst. four more cases are reported as having occurred in Marri, two of them fatal.—Times of India, July 28.

STATION TALK.

Ongole, July 18.—Next to the blessing of God on the country between Nellore and Guntoor nothing is of more importance than the early completion of the East Coast Canal; situated as we are here at Ongole, with four wide rivers between us and Nellore, and with one only a few miles to the north, and another twenty miles to the west, for two or three months in the year we are virtually on an island measuring twenty miles from north to south and twenty eight miles from east to west. Hence, of course, communication with Madras is next to impossible. In fact, frequently we have not the mail for several days in succession. Even when the roads and rivers are passable the hire for a cart carrying 600 pounds or thereabouts is from Rs. 18 to Rs. 24. Hence it is easy to see that the ryot or native merchant here has but a poor prospect before him, unless something is done to reduce the price of carrying to Madras. This is naturally a rich country, and only needs developing to become as eminent in agriculture, &c., as it is now in the superior breed of its cattle; for with Ongole as a centre, a circle with a radius of twenty-five miles would include that country which produces the far famed "Nellore cows." The canal being a fact, produces the far famed "Nellore cows." The canal being a tact, the salt produced at Kanuparte, Birumgoonta, and at the other pans in this section, which is now generally distributed by means of pack bullocks and donkeys would find its way to Madras largely and then be distributed by rail—a great saving of time and of money to the consumer. Another idea:—When the East Coast Canal is completed, cannot the iron in Ongole Hills be utilised? According to examinations made by R. Bruce Foote, Esq., of the Geological Survey, in seven places in the Ongole Hills, 50 per cent. or thereabouts, magnetic iron crops out of the ground. 50 per cent., or thereabouts, magnetic iron crops out of the ground. These places can all be reached by carts or tramway. A branch canal could be dug to Ongole without any great expense. These things being so, it seems too bad that we have to buy iron dug and smelted in England, while whole hills full of ore of a superior bind are as it were laughing at us. I believe that Governrior kind are, as it were, laughing at us. I believe that Government is anxious to have the Canal dug, and is ready to have any number of coolies at work, and to foot the bills. The late district engineer, Mr. J. Smith, calculated, so I learn, that it would take seventeen years to complete the canal. The present engineer thinks it may be done in four years. But it seems to me that it might be done in half that time and then leave a wide margin for play. In fact, I think that about 2,000 Irishmen, if they would work as they did when they built the Panama railroad or the Pacific railroad, would wheel the dirt out and open the canal from Madras to the Kistna in about ten months. However that might be, we can if necessary wait four years, but hope it will be no longer time in being dug.—Athenœum Correspondent.

Mr. Carey, an Accountant in the Telegraph Department at Karachi, has been committed to the Bombay Criminal Sessions on a charge of criminal breach of trust.

THE MADRAS PIER.—They are still tipping in hundreds of wagon loads of material into the sea from the end of our harbour pier, yet the work has not advanced one foot in the last five weeks. Neptune is mistaking the stones for foot-balls, and laughing at "departmental" engineering; while the Government, nothing disconcerted, are paying the piper at the expense of the public.— Madras Mail, July 28.

THE VISIT OF THE COMMISSIONER TO THE MAHARAJAN OF Mysor.—Mr. Saunders, the Chief Commissioner of Mysor, accompanied by Colonel Hay, the Commissioner of the Division, Captain Wilson, the Tutor, Mrs. Hay, and Mrs. Pearce, made a visit to his Highness the Maharajah and the Ranees at the Palace on Wednesday last. The visit lasted nearly three hours, and the usual two salutes of 13 guns were fired upon the Commissioner's arrival and departure.—Madras Mail, July 28.

THE WYNAD.—The Ukamand paper hears that the annexation of the whole of Wynad to the Nilgiris has been decided upon, though the decree will not be made public for some little time, and that Mr. Barlow is to be appointed Commissioner. Rumour also says that the chief opponent of the measure, Sir William Robinson, K.C.S.I., finding the tide running too strongly, has withdrawn his opposition on the ground that his objection was merely to the transfer of a portion of the Wynad.

THE LATE LORD HASTINGS.—The remains of the late Lord Hastings, who was struck down by jungle fever while out shooting on the Anamallay Hills, and died in the Travellers' Bungalow at Tanjor in December last, are to be conveyed to England immediately. His relatives at home have, it is reported, written to Dr. Burnell, C.S., the Sessions Judge of Tanjor, thanking him for his kind attention to the deceased during his dying hours, and begging of him to make the necessary arrangements for the yearly conveyance of the remains per P. and O. steamer to England.

RIFLE SHOOTING.—The ninth annual meeting of the Southern India Rifle Association is to be held at Bangalore on Wednesday, the 6th of September, and the following days. The committee has just published its programme. The prize of the occasion is the Bangalore Cup, value Rs. 500, to be shot for by teams (eight of all ranks) from each corps serving in the Presidency; seven rounds at 200 yards, and seven at 500 yards. Major W. Franklin, the hon. secretary to the committee, may be consulted about the other prizes, and the various rules and regulations.

Mysor.—Mr. Saunders, c.B., the Chief Commissioner, returned to Bangalor from Mysor on Wednesday last. It was thought that Mr. Saunders's stay at Mysor would have been longer, but it seems that his pleasant manner has greatly soothed the Ranees, who had a number of small grievances of their own, which have not been made public, and are not perhaps important enough to merit that distinction. A Bangalor paper reports that they are at an end, and that is enough. A grievance has, however, arisen, as the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Mysor Army is to be abolished. The reason for this step is said to be that the only troops Mysor can boast of are a few regiments of native cavalry and infantry known as Silladars and Barr, a very insignificant number for which so high an officer as a Commander-in-Chief is not required. The Dalvoy, as this officer is called, is highly indignant at the affront, as he considers it to be, but the abolition of his command raises the question of native armies, their extent and efficiency.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

THE POOR WHITE QUESTION.—It would seem that in benighted Madras they have effectually grappled with the poor white difficulty, and solved what would appear to be looked upon here as an insoluble and solved what would appear to be looked upon nere as an insoluce knot. This has been accomplished through the agency of a Friend-in-Need Society, which is, we see, at present, presided over by the Archdeacon of Madras. Its object is to relieve destitute Europeans and Eurasians, and in every district of the presidency it has local committees; so that the personal needs, the fitness, and the worthiness of each applicant for help can be readily investigated, and each case dealt with on its own merits. This seems to us the salient case dealt with on its own merits. This seems to us the salient feature in the Madras Friend-in-Need Society—a feature we in Bengal must imitate, if we really mean to grapple with the poor white question. Of our obligation to do this, and to do it at once, enough has been said to convince anyone who has ears to hear. But Bengal is busy, and is apathetic, over and above its business. our shame be it said, there seems but little hope of the public here initiating anything so comprehensive as this Friend-in-Need Society. Clearly, then, it behoves the Government to step in—the Government must, sooner or later, if only for safety's sake step in —between European destitution, and the lawlessness, loss of prestige, and oppression of villagers in the Mofussil which it entails, to leave alone other considerations.—Englishman.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD INGOTS.—The Madras Government have ust come in, through the Collector of the Kistna district, for a tidy little sum in gold ingots. It appears that a native, while digging on his lands to lay the foundation of a house he was building, came upon some buried treasure—hid away goodness only knows when. He removed the two chatties in which the gold lay to his house, and there re-buried them. Unfortunately for himself he made confidents of his wives, who, although enjoined to the strictest secrecy, spread the news all over the village before many days had passed. The news of the reported "find" soon reached the ears of the district revenue official, who called upon the finder to give up the treasure, which did not belong to him but to Government, the lawful owners of all unclaimed property, at the same time promising him a decent reward. The finder, however, denied that any treasure had been discovered by him; but the official was not to be hoodwinked; further inquiries were made, and satisfied that this statement was false, he ordered that the suspected man's house be searched. The search resulted in the discovery of the chatties and the gold buried in a corner of his hut, and as it was clearly shown that he never intended to give up any portion of the treasure to Government, the whole amount of treasure—some lac-and-a-half of rupees in gold ingots—was confiscated, and not so much as a pie given him as reward. The above amount, it is said, is to be made over to the Local Fund Board of the Kistna district for the construction of a new trunk road, and for the planting of trees on either side of that road.

ACCIDENT TO CAPTAIN BIEBER .- Captain M. Bieber, of the 13th Hussars, now stationed at Lucknow, who was a first-class passenger from Mettapollam to Bangalor, fell out of the carriage in which he was travelling on the 24th July. He appears to have fallen on to a bridge, and then dropped through to the ground beneath at the 164th mile, between Coopum and Collar Road stations. He was found in the morning by a gang maistry of the Engineers' Department, with his body covered with blood, but he appeared to be conscious. The maistry had him removed at once to a trolly with the intention of conveying him to the Colarr-oad Station, but the the intention of conveying him to the Colarr-oad Station, but the trolly was overtaken by the 8.30 A.M. passenger train from Bangalor, when the train was stopped by the guard and driver, and Captain Bieber was taken on to Jollarpett, where the Railway Apothecary was waiting to receive him. On examination it was found that he was badly hurt in the knee, on the chest just above the heart, and that the right jaw was fractured. It was thought advisable that he should at once be removed to Bangalor, and he was accordingly taken on by the 2.10 P.M. train, accompanied by the apothecary and two assistants from the Jollarpett station, arrangements having been previously made that a surgeon should be in attendance to take charge of him at the Bangalor station. It seems that the unfortunate gentleman was standing at the door of the carriage, which unaccountably opened, and he fell out. The accident was not known to anyone in the 12.50 A.M. train by which he was travelling; and he was not missed till the arrival of the train at Bangalor, when his servant informed the station-master that his master was not to be found. The station-master, supposing he had been left behind, telegraphed to several stations, and in reply heard from Jollarpett of the sad accident.—Madras Mail.

APPALLING INTELLIGENCE.—On the 17th June all the Paris papers announced, on the authority of the Havas Telegraph Agency, the appalling intelligence that the ship Mousson had blown up in Bombay harbour. All the shipping lists were searched in vain for the name of such a ship, and at last the insurance offices stopped inquiry on learning the real fact, that the south-west monsoon had burst at Bombay.—Argus.

THE WATER WORKS.—We hear that the water pipes for the fourteen-inch Mazagon main are not unlikely to form the subject of a lawsuit. They were sent out in the Atalanta, and it is alleged that a number of them have been damaged during the voyage. The consignees, it is reported, refuse to take delivery in consequence, and an active correspondence is going on between them and the steamer's agents, Messrs. Nicol and Co.—Times of India.

SIR P. WODEHOUSE'S SUCCESSOR.—Writing about Sir P. Wodehouse's successor, the Englishman revives its statement, made two months back, that Sir Bartle Frere had been offered the opportunity of returning, from next year, to his former gubernatorial post. At the time of our mentioning this, adds our contemporary, we remarked that there could be little likelihood of Sir Bartle Frere accepting the offer. Apart from the growing weight of age, we could searcely expect that the newly-made becomes the series of the series could scarcely expect that the newly-made baronet would be willing to exchange the comparatively light work of the Home Council and the considerable personal influence he exercises there for the anxious responsibility and, often, hard work of an executive ruler, though the emoluments are worth the attention of many a baronet. -Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

OFFICIAL NEWS REPORT FROM ADEN .-- News received from Mussowah to July 12 is to the effect that 2,000 troops that had arrived there from Egypt would return, as an understanding had been arrived at between Egypt and Abyssinia. The Khedive having forrived at between Egypt and Abyssinia. The Khedive having forwarded handsome presents to King John, the relief of the troops still in Abyssinia is, however, ordered by fresh drafts from Egypt. News has lately been received from Hurrar or Hodeida. The Sultan of the Foodhlee and Yafarr tribes propose visiting Aden shortly in connection with their long standing dispute regarding the water-supply. The claims of the owners of dhows destroyed by H.M.S. Thetis have been disposed of, and the compensation awarded paid them. 24,627 camels entered Aden from the interior during the month of June with supplies and merchandise.—G. R. GOODERLLOW. Acting Resident. Aden Goodfellow, Acting Resident, Aden.

DEATH AT ADEN.—A Bombay contemporary says:—"Quite lately the 6th Regiment of Bombay Native Infantry was sent to take its tour of duty at Aden; and in due course Captain Dalmahoy. Wing Subaltern, proceeded to Perim on detachment duty. He had not been there very long before the apothecary, who, with the detachment of sepoys, shared his exile, signalled a passing steamer to give notice at Aden that Captain Dalmahoy was alarmingly ill, and requesting that another officer might be sent off promptly to relieve him. The officer commanding at Aden at once detached an officer to take his place, and Captain Dalmahoy was brought to Aden, and sent home by the next P. and O. steamer. He died, however, three days after the steamer left Aden, and was buried at sea. The officer commanding the 6th N. I. at Aden, Colonel Ker, has not apparently found Perim agree with him, for he has been ordered to England on medical certificate."

A SUMMARY SUIT.—On Friday last at the High Court, a summary suit was heard before the Hon. Mr. Justice Pinhey, in which Jaitha Acka sued Sidney Laman Blanchard, Charles Ackrill, and Jaitha Acka sued Sidney Laman Blanchard, Charles Ackrill, and Poondlik Govind to recover Rs. 1,100 on three promissory notes. The first of the notes, dated 22nd of June last, was for Rs. 200, and bore interest at 36 per cent. per annum, while the second and third, both dated a week later, which were, for Rs. 500 and Rs. 400 respectively, bore interest at 30 per cent. per annum. The summons was served on the first and third defendants, but not on the second defendant, Mr. Ackrill, who has left Bombay. The claim being proved and there being no appearance for defendants, his Lordship proved, and there being no appearance for defendants, his Lordship gave a decree for plaintiff against the defendants Mr. Blanchard and Poondlik Govind, for Rs. 1,100, with interest on Rs. 200 at 36 per cent. per annum from 22nd of June last, and on Rs. 200 at 30 per cent. from 30th of June last, with costs Rs. 270, and further interest on the judgment at 6 per cent. until payment.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

THE KHELAT MISSION.—Major Sandeman's negotiations with his Highness the Khan of Khelat are, we hear, progressing well. Jam Ali from Lus Beyla, together with Sirdars Gour Khan, Ibrahim Khan, Chahar Khan and others of Jalawan, joined the camp at Mustag on the 5th inst. The Khan and all his chiefs are now assembled, so that if a settlement is really to be made between them it must soon be brought about. Should the Khan and his chiefs come to terms and observe them, the administration of Khelat will cease to be a cause of anxiety for the present, and we shall have secured the good-will of all parties in that state—a result which could hardly have been obtained by more direct interference. Major Sandeman appears to have acted with great judgment and caution in conciliating the hostile factions, and has, as far as we have learnt, fully justified the confidence with which we regarded his appointment to head the Khelat mission. Colonel Munro, Colonel Munro, Commissioner of Derajat, returned to his head-quarters at Dera Ismail Khan some time ago, but he continues to form the medium of communication between the Government and Major Sandeman. The date of the return of Major Sandeman and his escort to Jacobabad will, we presume, depend upon the length of time it may take to conclude a definite adjustment of the differences between the Khan and his chiefs.—Pioneer, July 26.

RETIREMENT OF COLONEL BOWEN.—Colonel Bowen, second-in-command of H.M.'s 3rd Regiment Native Light Infantry, has accepted the terms of the Retirement scheme and left the service. It is no mere form of speech to say that in Colonel Bowen Govern-ment loses a valuable officer. He was well known as being one of the smartest and best regimental officers in the Bombay army, and he is a man who can ill be spared. He entered the army in June, 1844, and has consequently served thirty-two years. He saw service first in the Southern Mahratta Country in 1844-45, being present at the storming and capture of the fine old port of Punalla, which many a time and oft sheltered Sivajee when some more than usually audacious act made the Mussulman hunt him into his strongholds in days that seem a very long way off now. Colonel Bowen was also in the campaign against Persia in 1856-57, was present at the bombardment of Mohumra, and received the medal with clasp. He was also in Abyssinia with the 3rd N.L.I., and commanded it temporarily there and subsequently in Poona, the then commandant having been invalided to England. Colonel Bowen was appointed second in command in 1868, and as during ten years he has not been fortunate enough to succeed permanently to the command, he has, like many others who find the seniority system tool tedious, taken advantage of the Retirement scheme. A strict disciplinarian, he was most kind and indulgent to the sepoys. His retirement makes the number up to seventeen, and search and Colonel Jacob and Colonel Mills have not in seventeen, and as Colonel Jacob and Colonel Mills have sent in their papers, there will only remain one vacancy for the current year. Colonel Jacob will be succeeded in command of the 22nd N.I. by Colonel Nuttall.—Times of India, Aug. 4.

A TAMIL JOURNAL .- The Moormen of Colombo, "in view of their rising importance, and the present position of affairs in Turkey," have established a newspaper, published in the Tamil vernacular. It is designated Puthinalankari, which, being freely interpreted, means, "The Embellished Lady of News." Some of the native journals of India have most fanciful and oftentimes grandiloquent titles, but this is the most gallant we have yet come across, and seems somewhat of an anachronism in the mouths of Moormen, whose seclusion of their women is most complete. Perhaps the Moormen consider there is some connection between ships -the winged messengers by sea-and newspapers, and that the sex is the same in both cases.

FORGERY.—On Wednesday at the Criminal Session Supreme Court, David Fernando, clerk or draftsman, S.G.O., who was convicted last week for forgery and uttering, and Benjo, a bookbinder victed last week for forgery and uttering, and Benjo, a bookbinder in the Record-office, were charged with conspiring to defraud the Crown of certain lands (about 4,000 acres in extent); forging various entries in a Register of Kandyan Grants kept in the Record-office, and maliciously and wilfully destroying certain public documents. To give the forged deeds the appearance of genuine documents of 1821, specially prepared ink was used, composed of Indian ink, lake, and other materials. One of the parties concerned in the forgery, George Elapathe, in favour of whose father the grants were made out, turned Queen's evidence. The concerned in the lorgery, George Elapathe, in lavour of whose father the grants were made out, turned Queen's evidence. The prisoners were found guilty, and sentenced, David Fernando be imprisoned and kept at hard labour for six months, to commence from the expiration of the eight years to which he had been already sentenced, and Benjo to hard labour for three years. The evidence showed extraordinary carelessness on the part of the Government, with regard to the custody of documents of great importance, on which the presiding judge remarked.—Ceylon Times, July 22.

THE BISHOP AND THE MISSIONARIES.—Dr. Copplestone, the ritualistic Bishop of Colombo, has put his foot down upon the missionaries in Ceylon of the Church Missionary Society, by the withdrawal of the licenses from twelve of their number who refused to submit to his wish to be informed, whenever he desired it, of any appointment to any spiritual office, lay or clerical in the Church. any appointment to any spiritual office, lay or clerical in the Church. They have one and all refused to submit to his authority in this form, and they have, it is said, the support of the parent society at home. A good deal of interest is felt by the missionaries of the same society in Bombay as Dr. Mylne, our new ritualistic Bishop, will, probably, make similar attempts in his diocese before long. Should he do so, perhaps the little spark in Ceylon may create a great fire, the dimensions of which we will not attempt to measure. A telegram from Colombo states that Bishon Copplestone's inhibit A telegram from Colombo states that Bishop Copplestone's inhibition against twelve missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, who are accused of contumacy, continues to cause considerable excitement. Several large meetings have been held, and the strongest expressions of disapproval of the Bishop's conduct have been given vent to. An appeal to Bishop Gell, of Madras, acting Metropolitan, is being prepared. Church Missionary work is suspended. Only one missionary possesses a license from the parent society at home who support the missionaries. The Bishop demands complete control over the missionaries, their catechists, congregations and services. These demands the missionaries are resolved to resist.—

Miscellaneous.

Consular Appointment.—(Foreign-office, Aug. 19.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. G. A. Fung as Consul for the West Coast of India from Cape Comorin to the Northern limit of the Madras Presidency, including the Native States, to reside at Cochin, for the German Empire.

MERCANTILE FAILURE.—We are informed that Messrs. J. and L. Fraser and Co., East India merchants, of 3, White Lion-court, Cornbill, have suspended payment. The house at one time occupied a very good position, but is understood to have lost heavily by the prolonged depreciation in produce. Nothing is yet said as to the liabilities, which are assumed to be only moderate.

The Slave Trade.—An Act has lately been printed for more effectually punishing offences against the laws relating to the Slave Trade. In Asia and Africa, under the Indian Penal Code, orders can now be made rendering amenable the subjects of Indian princes, as well as the subjects of her Majesty for offences on the high seas, as though the offences were committed on land in respect to slaves.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following were the exports to the East by the steamers of the P. and O. S. N. Company at the dates mentioned, viz.:—From Southampton, per Gwalior, Aug. 10, silver—to Bombay, £25,140; to Calcutta, £182,000; to Penang, £33,850; to Hong Kong, £3,800; to Shanghai, £49,700. From Southamp ton, per Lombardy, Aug. 17, silver—to Bombay, £59,000. It will be seen by Mr. De Quetteville's questions that the exports of silver to the Indian Presidencies are increasing considerably, while on the other hand no gold is in demand.

THE SILK TRADE.—With reference to the important rise in silk, we understand that, as regards Bengal silk surdahs that were worth 13s. are now worth 26s. per lb., the price having about doubled during the present year. In Japan silk, Maibash, which was worth 13s. 6d. to 14s., is worth now 27s. 6d. to 29s.; and in China silk, Tsatlees, that early in June this year were 13s. to 15s. per lb., are now 23s. to 27s. The latest telegram from China, stating that 55,000 bales had already arrived at Shanghai, leads to the expectation that the reduction in the export will not be as large as was expected.

SERIOUS FIRE.—At about three o'clock on Saturday morning, Aug. 19, a fire broke out at Beacon House, Strawberry-vale, Twickenham, the residence of Mr. Reuben David Sassoon, the East Indian merchant. All the family were at home and in bed, but all were removed safely, together with a portion of the furniture, to other houses near. The fire was discovered by Mr. Sassoon to be raging in the scullery, which adjoins the kitchen on the south wing. From the first floor upwards the building is entirely gutted. The ground floor and basement are extensively damaged. The estimated loss is about £2,000. The house is insured, but not the furniture.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for India Council drafts to the amount of £500,000 (fifty lacs of rupees) were opened at the Bank of England on Wednesday, the 23rd inst. Only £50,000 (five lacs) were taken up at the minimum of 1s. 8d., the whole being for Calcutta. The allotment was therefore anything but a success. Last week an entire fifty lacs was placed at 1s. 8\frac{1}{2}d.; and the present result may serve as a warning to the Indian Government not to leave the beaten track which they have pursued for years to force these bills upon remitters in the present unsettled state of the Silver Market. On Wednesday the quotation for silver bars was practically unchanged at 51 d. to 52d. per oz.; but some Mexican dollars were disposed of as high as 54d. per oz., there being an inquiry for this MEMORIAL TO GENERAL TOMBS, R.A.—A memorial canopy of archi-Artillery over the following inscription:—"To the glory of God, and in memory of that most distinguished officer, Major-General Sir H. Tombs, K.C.B., V.C., Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, born 10th November, 1824, died 2nd August, 1874, this font cover is placed by friends and brother officers." The Garrison Church at Woolwich is rich in mementos of gallant officers, and another addition is about to be made of an elegant set of memorang abointed to be readed. be made of an elegant set of mahogany choir stalls, to be erected at a cost of £500, to the memory of Colonel Middleton, late Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards.

PROPOSED THANK-OFFERING FOR THE PRINCE'S SAFE RETURN FROM INDIA.—At the next meeting of the Grand Lodge of Free-masons, which will be held at Freemasons' Hall next week, the subject of a thank-offering for the Prince of Wales's safe return from India will be again brought forward. At Grand Lodge of June 7 there were two motions brought on for giving £3,000 towards the restoration of St. Paul's and St. Alban's, and for the benefit of some charitable object in India; but the motions met with considerable opposition and an arms department. with considerable opposition, and an amendment was carried referring the consideration of the subject to a committee. At the Board of Masters, held the other evening, the Rev. R. J. Simpson gave notice of the names he intended to move at the Grand Lodge as the committee, and in the event of that not being carried he will propose an alternative resolution that £6,000 be given for three scholarships to be attached to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, the scholarships to be one at Oxford, one at Cambridge, and one at London. Dr. Jabez Hogg gave notice of an amendment to the same effect as the Rev. R. J. Simpson's original motion.

IMPORTANT CHANGE IN THE ALLOTMENT OF BILLS ON INDIA. most important change has been announced by the Secretary of State for India in the method of receiving applications for Council drafts. Tenders will be received at the Bank of England on Wednesday next up to two P.M., and on every succeeding Wednesday until further notice, for bills on Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay to the amount of £350,000 (Rs. 35,00,000) weekly, of which not more than Rs. 15,00,000 will be drawn on Bombay. But the allotment will not be announced until the next day, and the payment for any which may be accepted will have to be made on or before the Tuesday following. There are, at the same time, many other innovations of minor importance: but the following stipulation might be used following. There are, at the same time, many other innovations of minor importance; but the following stipulation might be used with serious effect in an unsettled market like ours:—"Power is reserved to issue bills for any smaller amount than Rs. 35,00,000 in any one week, and to carry over the difference to the succeeding weeks." Thus, in the case of an allotment such as Wednesday's, when only one-tenth of the bills were taken up, the remaining nine-tenths might be used to practically double the amount of the following week's tenders. In this way the Indian Government will always possess a standing reserve of bills, with which to take instant advantage of any rise in the exchanges, or in the price of silver. Whatever the result of these novel arrangements, they certainly indicate extreme anxiety at present to be rid of the bills.

Address to Sir Salar Jung.—The following address, very beautifully illuminated and enclosed in a handsome morocco case, has been presented by the National Indian Association to his Excellency Sir Salar Jung, K.c.s.i.:—

Your Excellency,—Will you permit us to offer to you the expression of our sincere congratulations on the occasion of your visit to our country. This we believe is the first instance in which a native nobleman holding the supreme authority in an important independent State in India has undertaken so long a journey to the West. This fact alone renders your Excellency's visit to our shores a circumstance of great importance and significance of considerable advance in a desire for social harmony between two nificance of considerable advance in a desire for social harmony between two great nationalities. But when viewed in connection with the recent progress through India of the Heir-Apparent to the British Crown, your Excellency's arrival in our metropolis, following close upon that of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, gives a happy augury of the beneficial results which may be anticipated from that unique and remarkable tour in establishing a feeling of confidence and sympathy between the inhabitants of her Majesty's Eastern and Western Empires as well as among their rulers. We address your Excellency as representatives of the National Indian Association in Aid of Social Progress in India. As we exclude from our programme all political action, we should think it out of place here to refer to the very important part which we are aware that your Excellency has taken in preserving friendly relations between the Nizans and the British Government under the most critical and difficult circumstances. But we well know nificance of considerable advance in a desire for social harmony between two ment under the most critical and difficult circumstances. But we well know how essential a settled political status is to social progress, and in this we are sure that your Excellency takes a warm interest, not only from what you have already effected but, from your having kindly acceded to our request that you would allow us to add your name to the vice-presidents of our A sociation. It is most gratifying to see thus associated together distinguished native and English nobles and philanthropists under the presidency of an illustrious Royal lady, the Princess Louis of Hesse, Princess Alice of Great Britain and Ireland, a lady esteemed in our country not less for her high descent than for her genuine interest in all benevolent work, and for her sympathy with the people of India. We trust that the relationship thus established between our Association and the important territory presided over by yourself will be productive of much future beneterritory presided over by yourself will be productive of much future benefit to both. We earnestly desired to have received a visit from your Excellency in our city, and lament that the weak state of health caused by an untoward accident has prevented your accepting our invitation. The et of Bristol, though not one of our largest centres of commercial or n turing importance, yields to none in the remarkable beauty of its surround. ing scenery, the archælogical interest of its antique buildings, the many different manufactures which may be visited within a small compass, and especially the variety and excellence of its educational, benevolent, and reespecially the variety and excellence of its educational, penevolent, and reformatory institutions. All these would, we hoped, have afforded you, en your return to your country, subjects of interesting recollection, and would have given you a greater insight into the life of the nation than could possible the petropolis with its many exciting interests. We sibly be obtained in the metropolis with its many exciting interests. We beg your Excellency to accept our best wishes for your safe return to your own country, and for success in all your important undertakings, and to subscribe ourselves, very faithfully yours, The Committee of the National Indian Association. Signed on behalf of the Committee, Christophers, James Thomas, 27. Mayor of Reight. JAMES THOMAS, ex-Mayor of Bristol; MARY CARPENTER, Honorary Secreterv.

Summary and Revielv.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, August 11; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, August 9; Caloutta, August 8.

THE Viceroy in Council has published a resolution announcing that in consequence of the depreciation in silver, the loss by exchange, notwithstanding the increased loan, will largely exceed the estimated loss, and the prospects of the customs revenue are unfavourable owing to the same cause. The opium expenditure, owing to the large crop, will exceed the estimate by fifty lakhs. All unnecessary expenditure, if sanctioned, and not likely to cause loss, is to be stopped, and the outlay on extraordinary public works reduced. No loans, unless absolutely necessary, are to be granted to Municipalities, native States, or private persons. All local Governments and other authorities are to co-operate in reducing the threatened deficit.

THE Viceroy is reported to have left Simla on the 9th ult. for a week's trip into the interior, as far as Narkundah. The mist which envelopes the mountains during this season will prevent his Excellency enjoying the magnificent view of the snowy range visible from that spot, unless the clouds are more than usually propitious, and lift themselves for a hasty peep. Lord Lytton is accompanied by Colonel Hall, Acting Superintendent, Hill States.

It is stated in a Bombay contemporary that the Government of India is likely to break up its summer quarters at Simla rather earlier this year than usual. It has already been mentioned that Lord Lytton is understood to contemplate a personal inspection of the Sind and Punjab frontier during the cold weather. The Times of India says:—"Arrangements of this kind are never officially announced till the last moment, lest any circumstance might arise which would induce a change of plans; but barring this contingency, the Sind journey is tolerably certain. Hardly less so is another expedition which the Viceroy is understood to have decided on. This is a visit to Kashmir, which will probably precede the Sind trip; in fact, the programme that seems to have been drawn out for his Excellency provides for his departure from Simla for Kashmir in the middle of October—say about the 15th."

BOTH the European and native members of the Allahabad Bar were to hold a meeting in August to protest against Lord Lytton's interference with the High Courts in his late Minute on the Fuller case.

THE Englishman contains the following reference to the retirements expected in the Civil Service:—"Rumour forces the first twenty-seven on the Civil List to retire, two only having completed thirty-five years. It may be they are so dealt with, the others may be inducible."

A Mr. Purcell has been committed to the Sessions Court, Calcutta, on a charge of cheating.

SIMLA news, dated August 9, includes the following domestic item:—"Lady Lytton has been safely delivered of a son."

It is stated that Mr. Saunders, with his staff and family, has paid a long visit to the Maharaja and Ranis of Maisur.

THE Englishman refers to a municipal misunderstanding of some importance. Our contemporary observes:—"The resolution of the Calcutta Justices not to sell the municipal water to the shipping in port, at a profit of 1,600 per cent., is exciting much indignation."

WE noticed in the Mail of Aug. 19 a strange rumour of the sudden disappearance of a young officer from his regiment at Cherat. We now read in the Englishman that the officer in question, Lieut. Lane, of the 31st Light Infantry, has since been found, enlisted as a private in the 4th Hussars.

The Bombay Gazette, August 11, has received accounts of disastrous floods in the Portuguese Settlement of Goa, especially in the low-lying tracts on the borders of the river of Chapora. The villages of Nadora, Revora, Colvalle, Camorlim, Oxel, and Siolim, lying on the bank of the river, have suffered considerable damage in house property, loss of life, and extensive destruction of crops. Dead bodies of human beings were floating down the river, and with them were seen teams of bullocks supposed to have been carried away by the currents from British territory. At Colvalle the whole of the hamlets of the fishermen were totally wrecked, and at Camorlim thirty-six houses have shared the same fate. Four days previous to the 25th July the rain was falling in torrents, and the water on that day had risen to an unprecedented height. The palace of the Governor at Pangin and the Seminary at Rachol have not escaped injury from the results of the heavy rains.

REPORTS had reached Bombay also of very heavy rains at Manantoddy (Aug. 6). Considerable damage has been done to the young coffee blossoms. Miles of property were also washed away at Mangalore; hundreds of people are houseless, and there is great destitution.

MAHARAJA HOLKAR is reported to be about to retire from the active duties of a Sovereign for fifteen months, in consequence of illness, and his eldest son, with a Council of five, will rule the country.

CHOLERA had appeared amongst the 5th Fusiliers at Allahabad according to accounts dated to Aug. 10. Up to Aug. 1 there had been seventy-six deaths from cholera at Marri. All the visitors were leaving. Many persons in Lucknow were suffering from dengue. Cholera had left Almora, and the quarantine had been removed.

It is said that Major-General Primrose is expected to succeed Lord Mark Kerr in the command of the Puna Division. Another report is that Surgeon-Major Doharty, 12th Foot, goes as Deputy Surgeon-General to the Peshawar Circle, in the place of Dr. Gordon, who has been ordered home to Gibraltar.

THE following items of news regarding movements in the Civil Service are reported:—Mr. T. D. Beighton, C.S., has been reappointed a Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court. Lieutenant-Colonel W. Gordon is appointed District Superintendent of Police at Muzafarpur. Captain Clementi goes as Deputy Judge Advocate to the Oudh Circle. Mr. G. Thornhill, First Member of the Madras Board of Revenue, has gone on leave. Major B. Hobart, Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras, has returned from leave, and resumed duty.

Amongst the casualties by death in or connected with the Indian services, reported at home, we notice the following:-Major General Henry Willoughby Trevelyan, C.B., Colonel Commandant Royal (late Bombay) Artillery; Lieut. Colonel Clement John Mead, Royal Artillery, Bengal Staff Corps, Engineer-in-Chief P.W.D., Agra; Lieut. Colonel J. Campbell, late H.M.'s 60th Royal Rifles; Colonel Skeffington Poole, late Bombay Army; Lieut. Colonel H. A. Rooke, Bengal Indian coal seems steadily gaining in favour with the railway authorities. The Madras Railway Company have advertised for tenders for the supply of 10,000 tons of Indian coal fit for use in locomotive engines. During the year 1874 some interesting experiments were made to determine the relative values for railway purposes of English, Australian, and Indian The following figures speak for themselves:

South India Railway.

Madras Railway. Average Consumption | Consumpt t per mile run. Average Consumption per mile. Cost per mile per Coal. Cost Rs. a. p. lbs. a. p. Rs. a. p. lbs. a. p. Australian 27 13 1 ... 27 35 ... 4 5 21 ... 25 12 0 ... 32 45 ... 5 9 4
Indian 21 8 0 ... 31 08 ... 4 9 28 ... 19 0 0 ... 32 32 ... 4 4.64
English 31 11 5 ... 31 23 ... 7 0.89 ... 30 6 0 ... 35 72 ... 7 9 00 These results agree in placing English, coal at the bottom of the list both for costliness and quality, while Indian coal indicates a value much greater than was expected. The latter coal is said to burn freely, and is liked by the drivers. We are told by the Madras Mail that consignments were delivered in store at Madras last year for Rs. 20.10 per ton, and if special

WE learn from the Madras Mail that experiments lately made in the Gun Carriage Factory at Madras, with the view of testing the respective merits of Australian and Indian (in comparison with English) coal, show that Indian coal can be advantageously employed in the workshops, if procurable at a cheaper rate than the English article, but that it is unsuited for staiths' work. Australian coal, however, works equally well with the best English steam coal, with the only drawback that the consumption of the former averages a little over 5 per cent. in excess of the latter. This excess, however, is neutralised by the difference in cost of the two descriptions of coal, leaving a small margin in favour of the Australian article.

arrangements could be made for carriage from Calcutta, it is not unlikely that this figure might be still further reduced.

WE hear that the scheme drawn up by Sir Andrew Clarke, Minister of Public Works in India for the reorganisation of the Public Works Department, will soon be ready for submission to Government, so that the changes and reductions therein contemplated may be introduced and effected before December next.

It is announced that the revision of the Civil Procedure Code will be undertaken very shortly by the Legislative Council. The measure to be brought forward, it is said, will | be rather a Consolidation Act than one which imports any striking changes into the existing law.

WE are glad to hear that Lord Lytton has reinstated Mr. Calvert, the original discoverer of the Kulu Mines, as lessee on leases of twenty years. It appears the mines were stopped two years ago by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. Lord Northbrook never found time to look into the matter, although the Marquis of Salisbury ordered the restitution of the leases a year ago, remarking that Mr. Calvert had been very ill-used. It has been left to Lord Lytton to complete the measure of justice then decreed. The loss caused by the stoppage and delay is estimated at over £12,500, of which not a rupee will ever be recovered.

SURGEON J. BOURKE has won the first place in a competition for the best pattern of an improved Dhooly, a kind of covered litter slung on a long pole which two men can bear on their shoulders. A Simla committee, appointed by the army head-quarters, after examining four or five patterns, decided in favour of Dr. Bourke's, which is to have a practical trial on service. The dhooly now selected for trial seems, we are told, to be a very good one. It is cheap, easily put together, and readily taken to pieces. Except for a few bits of inexpensive iron work, its materials are procurable in almost any Indian village, and its various parts are capable of application to several different uses in a way which does much credit to the ingenuity of its inventor.

While the true nature and origin of the Bardwan fever epidemic remain still to guess at, it is a comfort to hear that, after raging for ten years with steady violence, this scourge of Lower Bengal has at length for the time being raged itself out. In the absence of abnormal sickness, the relief operations, started about seven years ago by the local Government have been brought to a close, and it only remains now to take brief note of what was done in the way of relief. It appears that during the rains and cold weather of 1869-70 and 1870-71, four or five itinerant dispensaries were opened in various parts of the Bardwan district, through which about a hundred and forty thousand cases were treated. The disease still gaining ground; it appears that in 1871 twenty-four new dispensaries were opened before the end of that year Throughout the year 1872 fiftysix dispensaries on the average were maintained. In this year alone three civil surgeons broke down through the hard work entailed upon them by the epidemic, combined with the unhealthiness of the station. In the two next years the average number of dispensaries open was forty. In 1875 the number fell to twenty-nine, some of which were self-supporting; and, during the early part of the present year, this number was further reduced to fifteen. How fearful a mortality the aid thus given by the Government has prevented may be gathered from the fact, that between 1866 and 1876 upwards of four million fever-stricken patients were treated, the greater part of them gratuitously, at these establishments. Between August, 1871, and April, 1876, when the relief operations ceased, nearly a ton and a half of quinine, and other chinchona alkaloids, valued roughly at Rs. 1,62,245, were dispensed; and the total cost of medicines of all kinds issued in the four years was Rs. 2,45,071, while the outlay for special establishments, and contingent charges, including food relief, was Rs. 2,82,558. Thus, more than five and a quarter lakhs of rupees, or between £52,000 and £53,000 sterling have been expended for the relief of the Bardwan fever in the Bardwan district alone. What the present condition of the district might have been but for these efforts we shudder to think.

A GOOD many British regiments in India are about to lose & great number of short-service men next year, and it appears that the number of these men who are willing to re-engage is out of all proportion to the number who will insist on claiming their discharge. One regiment will lose over 300 men, out of whom barely half-a-dozen have signified their intention of volunteering to serve again. Another, says the Pioneer, loses half its very fine band by men taking their discharge, to the consternation of its officers. It must be remembered that when a trained soldier is discharged his passage is paid home or to one of the colonies. His services are lost to India, and besi les paying his passage home Government must get a substitute for him out from England. What—asks our contemporary—" would be the cost of this? Would it not enormously exceed the cost of a very substantial bounty with a free kit to every soldier willing to re-engage for a further period? The answer is obvious. The whole matter is one of considerable importance to India, and well worthy of the attention of the authorities." India in fact is beginning to pay dearly for the original mistake of substituting borrowed troops entirely for her old local European army. Had the old system been retained and worked on a larger scale, none of the difficulties which now meet the Government at every turn, involving larger and ever larger outlay, would have occurred, and India would have had a much more efficient army than she is ever likely to get under any existing arrangement.

An incident reported from India by the last mail amusingly illustrates the hunger of English officers for any kind of war service, no matter where, and the readiness with which they grasp at any shadow of a plea for gratifying that hunger. Half the unemployed field officers in India are understood, says a contemporary, "to be besieging the Government of India for commands in Egypt. The military promptitude of their imagination leaves no interval between the fact of a civil war in Turkey and the despatch of an Indian army to occupy the dominions of the Khedive. The premature aspirations of would-be brigadiers have even led to definite announcements in some newspapers, and to still more startling rumours in conversation. It has been alleged that the Government has applied to specific generals of divisions to know what troops they could spare for Egypt. The exact numbers to be sent have been quoted, and no canard on this subject has been too extravagant for credulity."

THE Indian Government is said to be revolving a comprehensive scheme for the reform of prison discipline in India. As a step to that end it proposes, according to the Friend of India, "to enter upon an impartial consideration of the whole subject, and by eliciting and comparing the ripest opinions of all who have knowledge or experience of it, to arrive, not at a uniform, inflexible scheme of management applicable alike to every jail in India, but at some great leading principles which will give character and effect to the various practical rules which may be laid down in different provinces." A conference on the subject is to be convened, probably in Calcutta during the next cold season, and the local Governments have already received notice of what is in contemplation.

ACCORDING to a Times telegram, dated Sept. 3, it is finally arranged that the Viceroy will leave Simla on the 16th of October, his private military and foreign secretaries accompanying him. He will go first to Jummoo to meet the Maharajah of Kashmere, and proceed thence to Srinuggur, returning via Murree, Rawul Pindee, and Peshawur, and arriving at Lahor on the 24th of November. From thence he will go to Bhawulpore, Jacobabad, and Kurrachee, and thence by sea to Bombay, arriving on the 14th of December, and will return to Calcutta after the Delhi Durbar. The Viceroy will go to Simla as usual next year, as the question of changing the Government summer quarters has not been settled. It is stated that Colonel Colley, who was sent to inspect Rancekhet, reports favourably on the place. The Viceroy has appointed Lieutenant-Colonel Davis, with an officer from the Foreign-office, and one from the Quartermaster-General's Department, to act as a committee for arranging the details of the Delhi Durbar. It is stated their instructions are to make it the grandest affair of the kind ever seen. Three brigades of cavalry and six of infantry, with proportionate artillery, will be present. The Madras and Bombay Armies and Punjaub Frontier Force will all be represented. It is reported that the Nizam will be among the Native Princes attending.

THE same telegram states that Sir Salar Jung arrived at Hyderabad on the 26th ult., and was received with illuminations and general rejoicings. The Yarkund's envoy is expected at Lahor on the 10th, and proceeds thence to Simla. The High Court of Allahabad has submitted a strong remonstrance against Lord Lytton's Minute on the Fuller case. The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, in forwarding the Minute of the Court to the Supreme Government, makes no remarks on constitutional or legal questions, but warmly endorses the Court's recommendation for a review of the punishment awarded to the joint magistrate, Mr. Leeds; but the Viceroy has not yet answered. Nothing further has been heard regarding the report that the other High Courts intended to join in the protest.

From the same source we learn that the first municipal election in Calcutta was held on Friday. The result is not yet published, but it is certain that only four or five Europeans are elected, and over forty natives. The election excited little interest, and few Europeans came forward either as voters or candidates, nor did many natives of the higher classes, socially speaking, offer themselves for election. The names of the Government nominees, who will form one-third of the municipal body, are not yet announced. It will be interesting to watch the working of this the first attempt to introduce representative government in this city. The general idea is that, owing to the radical defects of the system, it will be inferior to the old corporation, which consisted of the Justices of the Peace.

WE learn also that her Majesty's ship Diamond and the Government steamer Enterprise, which were sent to search for the missing steamer Scotia, returned to Rangoon without finding any traces of her. There is little doubt that the Scotia was lost with all on board.

WITH reference to Mr. Dacosta's letter, which appeared in our last issue, we would draw attention to certain figures and statements offered by Mr. Thornton, Secretary for Public Works at the India-office, in his paper read last May, before the Society of Arts, wherein he showed that the Indian Irrigation Works in the several provinces yield, with due allowance for the cost of those first constructed by native rulers, a yearly return ranging from 4.5 per cent. for the Ganges Canal to 39.7 per cent. on the Godavari Canals. Here are the figures as he gives them:—

Mr. Thornton might well say that results even by himself so unexpected would "probably take most other people by surprise." We agree with him that if these estimates have been "honestly reached," and if the indirect savings from these works were added to the direct annual earnings, "the result would be a total that would convince the most sceptical that, regarded as a whole, the investment of our Government in irrigation works has hitherto been decidedly the reverse of unprofitable."

One of the pleasantest books of travel which it has lately been our lot to read is "The Indian Alps and How we Crossed Them," by a "Lady Pioneer," whose skill with the pen is rivalled, as the woodcuts and chromo-lithographs show, by her easy handling of the pencil. The main fault we can find with the book would be deemed a merit, if the book were intended merely to lie on the drawing-room table and beguile a few minutes of chance leisure here and there. It is a handsome quarto volume, nicely printed on fine paper, with a bread margin to the page and a pretty-looking cover in green and gold. The ten coloured plates are fairly good, and some of them, such as the Bhotia Village, the Plains of Nepal, Mount Everest at sunrise, Nursyng and Pundeem in the evening, reveal through all the drawbacks of chromo-lithography a true artistic feeling for grand forms and effective colouring. Of the many little woodcuts, each in its own way justifies itself. But the chief value of this goodly volume lies after all in the letterpress. It is so thoroughly readable; the story told is so full of interest and instruction, agreeably conveyed; and the scenes described are on the whole so new to English experiences, that the "Lady Pioneer" ought to command a wide circle of readers. Will she succeed in doing so, decked out in her present guise, so hardsome, but so unwieldy? Is not the mere physical labour of reading such a book enough to scare away many of those who can boast neither of strong wrists nor unyielding backs? These, however, are questions which the author must be allowed to settle with her publishers; and meanwhile let us hope that many readers will brave the penance for the sake of the pleasure purchasable thereby. "The Indian Alps," as here presented to us, are not those adjacent to Simla, Missourie, or Naini-Tal; they are the yet loftier section of the vast Himalayan Range which towers northward of Darjiling, and embraces Kinchinjanga and Mount Everest. The author and her party pierced into the region of perpetual snow, about 17,000 feet above the sea, and got to the very foot of Mount Junnoo, itself 25,000 feet high. How they roved, fared, suffered, lost their way at last in dreary solitudes where no food could be got, and were even reduced to their last biscuit and drop of wine before the help they had all but despaired of came within reach, is told in this volume with a lively grace and a genial humour which remind one closely of Lady Barker. Among books of travel written by women, who have a special aptitude for that sort of work, this of the Lady Pioneer's ought to win a very high place.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, September 4, 1876.

LORD LYTTON'S FIRST GREAT BLUNDER.

WITH every wish on our part to believe well of the Viceroy, we are driven to admit that the outcry provoked among our countrymen in India by his recent Minute on Mr. Fuller's case has not been raised without good cause. Englishmen in India are naturally sensitive to any public comments on their behaviour towards the natives; but if Lord Lytton had merely confined himself to denouncing Mr. Fuller's conduct towards his syce as unmanly and damaging to the British character, it is probable that few of them would have resented the expression, however strong, of a feeling honourable to the ruler of two hundred millions of an alien race. The spectacle of an English gentleman preluding his attendance at church by slapping the face of a servant who had failed to wait upon him at the right moment, is not such as a churchgoer about to acknowledge himself a miserable sinner might be expected to offer. But Lord Lytton went a good deal further than the lecturing of a person whose hasty violence had led to an unforeseen mishap. He took Mr. Leeds, the joint magistrate at Agra, severely to task for punishing with a fine of only Rs. 30 an offence which caused the death of Mr. Fuller's servant, instead of referring the case to a higher Court. That gentleman ought, he thinks, to have been tried for causing grievous hurt, if not for culpable homicide, because "in consequence of Mr. Fuller's illegal violence his servant died." The High Court of Allahabad are publicly rebuked for neglect of duty in upholding the course pursued by the Agra magistrate; and the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces is twitted with having made no inquiry into the matter until the Viceroy had "directed" him to do so.

For all this outpouring of Viceregal wrath there now appears to have been no colourable pretext. Even if the Agra magistrate and the Allahabad judges had fallen short of their duty, so public an attack upon them was surely to be deprecated; and the very support which the High Court gave to the magistrate's proceedings ought to have held his lordship back from waging open war with the highest ministers of justice in the province. But the blunder thus committed is greatly intensified by the actual groundlessness of Lord Lytton's attacks. In his apparent zeal for humanity and fair play to the helpless and oppressed, his lordship not only by all accounts set himself against the members of his Council and Secretariat; but he appears wholly to have set aside the first principles of administrative justice. Mr. Leeds, in fact, was severely scolded for not doing what, by the Indian Penal Code, he ought not to have done. It appears from Section 321 of the Penal Code that, "Whoever does any act with the intention of thereby causing hurt to any person, or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person, and does thereby cause hurt to any person is said 'voluntarily to cause hurt." Before Mr. Fuller could have been tried for the greater offence of "voluntarily causing grievous hurt" it would have been necessary to show, according to another section of the Code, that the blow dealt by him was "likely to cause grievous hurt," of whatever kind, and however little intended. Now it is pretty certain that a slap on the face was not likely to cause any of the grievous hurts, specified in the Penal Code; the loss, for instance, of "any member or joint," the fracture of a bone or tooth, or a state of severe bodily pain lasting for twenty days, and disabling the sufferer from his ordinary pursuits. There was no evidence before the magistrate to show that Mr. Fuller had done anything worse than cause such hurt as might ensue from slapping his servant's face, or pulling his hair, for it is absurd to accept the inference suggested by Lord Lytton, that he knew a blow of that sort was likely to bring on rupture of the spleen. Diseased spleens are not, after all, so common in India that the infliction of a slight blow should be held tantamount to culpable homicide, or even to wilful causing of grievous hurt.

Whether Mr. Leeds should have inflicted a heavier fine is a question which does not specially concern us; the High Court held that perhaps he should. Be that as it may, it seems undoubted that he could not legally have indicted Mr. Fuller for any other offence than that of which he was convicted. This being so, the gravity of Lord Lytton's blunder speaks for itself. An English magistrate has been openly disgraced for doing his duty; English judges have been flouted for upholding the law; and the Governor of a large province, as populous as Great Britain, has been rashly accused of neglecting his duty in a matter wherein his interference was not required. And the blunder seems to us the less excusable, in that it was committed by a Viceroy still new to office, and therefore bound in some measure to defer to the opinions of his chief advisers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATES OF INDIA.
TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—Pray do not start on reading the above heading, but allow me to ask, calmly and quietly, with a view to the subject being generally considered, why the great assembly that is to be gathered together at Delhi, "Imperial Delhi," on the 1st January, 1877, of "the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces," should not be converted into a first constitutional assembly of all India, to which the chief towns should be required to send representatives? The occasion would be a really "politically" glorious one, and a new régime might be inaugurated under the most favourable auspices. The great Marquis of Dalhousie entertained some such idea twenty-two years ago.—Yours sincerely,

Aug. 30, 1876. * * * * *

RETIREMENT OF A NATIVE JUDGE.—Saiad Ahmad Khan Bahadur, c.s.i., long well-known as the Judge of the Benares Small Cause Court, has retired from the public service on the pension of his rank. In forwarding to the Government his application for permission to retire, the High Court put on record its testimony to the high and unblemished reputation for intelligence, industry, and integrity which he had enjoyed among all classes, during a long official career, and expressed its sense of the loss which the public service will sustain by his retirement to the leisure he has so honourably earned. Sir John Strachey, accepting the Saiad's resignation, expressed his high opinion of the integrity and independence which have marked his career as a public servant, and of the enlightened and disinterested labours which he has undertaken in private life for the benefit of his countrymen.—Pioneer.

INDIAN HOTELS.

The Pioneer remarks that India is strangely behind the age in the matter of hotels. Simla, in this respect, is not worse off than places with a more constant demand for hotel accommodation, and the present state of things is the more surprising because Anglo-Indians would naturally be prone to live in hotels. In every large station a hotel that was only third-rate, judged by an European standard, could hardly fail to attract nine-tenths of the permanent bachelor population, and a large number of floating married couples; for a third-rate hotel would be so many degrees better than anything people are used to in India that it would seem a palace. First-rate hotels can only be grown in the great cities, or specially fashionable watering-places of Europe. The Grand and the Louvre at Paris, the Laugham in London, the Beau Rivage at Ouchy-Lausanne, are first-rate hotels, whose architectural decorations and furniture may be compared with those of a Pall Mall club. And the Fifth Avenue at New York would claim to be included in the list, though the truth is that American hotels, even the best-and in one at Saratoga there are thirteen acres of carpet, and seven miles of telegraph wire within the house—are too garish and coarse in their organisation to be really first-rate. Then there are ranges of hotels which were once first-rate, but by reason of having latterly been surpassed in splendour by newer rivals, can now only be described as second-rate. Of such are the Russie at Frankfort, the Euston in London, the Trois Rois at Bale,—hotels which old habitués will still swear by on account of some special excellence not to be obtained, so their admirers will declare, in any of your new-fangled palaces. hardly hope for anything up to this level in India. But Calcutta, Bombay, Simla, and Allahabad at all events, might surely expect to be provided with third-rate hotels, institutions, that is, about seven degrees better than anything they possess yet. In a third-rate hotel the house would be handsomely built, the private rooms commodious, nicely furnished, and faultlessly clean, the salle a manger spacious and not altogether without decoration, the cuisine equal to that of an exceptionally good military mess, the service carried on by an army of bearers and khitmutgars in a handsome uniform, and the drawing-room, billiard-room, and reading-room mounted with unexceptionable taste. A hotel of that sort would pay in India. At exceptionable taste. A notel of that sort would pay in India. At present the best hotels in actual existence must surely fall short of even the paying standard of excellence. We cannot tell, of course, whether they pay or not as a matter of fact, but at any rate they fall short of the attractive standard of excellence. Some of them are much better than others, but the best are not such establishments as people choose to dwell in, if they are settled enough to organise any others for themselves, while those that are not the best are appraintly set up by desperadoes without resources or experience. are apparently set up by desperadoes without resources or experience, or knowledge of what a comfortable mode of living really is. Such ersons fancy they have created a hotel when they have simply magnified a dak bungalow.

ASSAULTING NATIVES.

The Calcutta Statesman believes with Lord Lytton, that there is far less striking of natives than there used to be, but would ask any Englishman who has been in India five, ten, or fifteen years, if he can honestly say that he has never struck a native. certain that there are few, if any, who can say so, and yet men in India are neither all shameless, nor all thoughtless. But if we may judge from the analysis of our own feelings, there is an immediate feeling of shame which is due to the considerations we have men-A man is painfully distressed by the thought that he has perhaps done an injustice; by the reflection that, on further investigation, the man he has struck might have been found free from fault; and that he has, nevertheless, inflicted a punishment beyond recall. It is this which pains him, that a punishment, however slight, has been inflicted which cannot be remitted, when possibly it was either too severe or altogether undeserved. Even if, subsequently, he, in cooler blood, and with more facts before him, finds that he did not real injustice, he yet has the reproach on his mind of having risked it. A blow then is, in a strict sense, not especially wrong because it is a blow, but because it is a practical embodiment of the invasion of constituted rights. A calculating, cold-blooded man may keep within the law, may invade no rights, and may yet deliberately inflict great cruelty and injustice. The more impulsive, and perhaps more amiable man, may in the heat of the moment do a very slight illegal act, and yet, because it has taken a particular form, he is violently condemned by society. It is quite right that he should be socially condemned on the ground we have stated; but the ordinary form which the condemnation takes, namely, that the strong should not strike the weak, because they can do so with impunity, involves a non-sequitur. This moral disapprobation of society has in India, as elsewhere, caused the great reform in this matter of giving blows which Lord Lytton admits, and to this same cause only we must look for still further improvement; but the moral disapprobation to be effective and free from mischief must be well founded, and the reason it is becoming more effective daily is that, consciously or unconsciously, society is learning to take juster views of the relations between man and man. We wish the same thing could be always said of our rulers. An ordinary blow is, we have said, the practical embodiment of the invasion of the constitutional rights of an individual; but a blow to the High Court of a province, to the repository of the rights of the whole community, is a far more serious invasion. By this means not one, but all individuals are attacked; yet this is the blow which Lord Lytton has given. He is certainly not justified by one of the principles we have laid down, and we hope by neither.

A DIFFICULTY OF OLD DATE.

The Times of India reminds us that the exchange and currency question is a difficulty of very old date. It must have troubled the Hebrew financiers in the reign of Solomon, when silver was nothing accounted of, and had become as stones in a field—good only to fing at the birds. But without going back quite so far as the wisest of monarchs, it is plain that Warren Hastings was not a little exercised in his mind by the ever-recurring difference between supply and demand, for we find him writing to Lord Thurlow, under date of 1st February, 1786:—"Bengal has been annually drained of its currency since British possession of it, by the Company's investment, by supplies sent to China, Fort St. George, Bombay, and by the remittance of the fortunes of British subjects to Europe. These drains must be continued in a degree both for the Company's investment and for the remittances of the fortunes of individuals. They may and ought to be diminished by the forbearance of supplies to China and the other Presidencies, and by laying equitable restrictions on private emoluments. If Fort St. George and Bombay cannot maintain their own expenses in time of peace with their own resources, and furnish, besides, a profit to the Company, the nation ought to part with or abandon them. The means of laying equitable restrictions on private emoluments do not consist in multiplying penal laws, or increasing their rigour at home, but in establishing an efficient control in the government abroad, in affording liberal allowances, in constituting proper and competent offices for checks on contingent expenses, and above all, for the speedy and regular audit of accounts. Every encouragement should be given, and every expedient for the enlargement of the existing trade, for opening channels of trade with other countries, and for drawing new inhabitants into our own provinces, which and for drawing new inhabitants into our own provinces, which their fertility and security, and the miserable desolation of the royal demesnes would render at this moment an attempt of easy accomplishment." From this curious letter it may be inferred that fortunes were in those days too often made by illicit means, and further, that remittances to Europe must have taken the form of silver specie or bullion. If this were the case, the object was probably to conceal from the Bengal Government the amount of the "emoluments" that had been unjustly accumulated, for otherwise it would have been more natural as well as more profitable to have remitted those gains in the shape of Indian products and produce. It is also evident that Warren Hastings, had be witnessed the present crisis would have been in favour of sushe witnessed the present crisis, would have been in favour of suspending for a while the Secretary of State's drafts upon India, at least if we may judge by his proposition to forbear sending supplies to China and the other Presidencies. The most characteristic point. however, in his letter is the following passage, which betrays his own craving for absolute power, and at the same time painfully illustrates the corruption by which he was surrounded:—"But netable ther," he insists, "can the improvement of actual resources, nor the creation of new, nor the reformation of abuses be made except by a single, strong, and despotic hand. The members of a collective government are unresponsible; they will all have their claims to wealth and to remittances; each will have his favoured dependants, for whom he will claim a share in the emoluments of office, and protect them in the abuse of it; and the Governor himself, let his integrity be what it will, will be forced to yield in a degree to the general torrent, or he will be assailed and overborne by his associates, and not have a friend or an instrument in the service to support or assist them."

Archæological.—In August last year Sir John Strachey, Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. Provinces, published a minute on the preservation of works of art and antiquity in those provinces. From 1872 to the end of 1875 the expenditure of Rs. 1,67,583, on the Palace Buildings, Agra Fort, and on the Taj Mahal has been sanctioned, of which sum Rs. 79,588, were spent on the Taj Mahal alone. Besides these two interesting works a sum of Rs. 1,968 has been spent on Futehpur Sikri; and on the temple of Govind Deva at Brindaban, Muttra, Rs. 19,533 have been spent, but still the work of improvement is not completed. Estimates have been prepared to the extent of Rs. 6,91,239 to be spent on the above works, including the magnificent buildings at Jaunpur. The Government of India have agreed to grant Rs. 1,75,000, leaving Rs. 5,16,239 to be provided out of the provincial balances, which can be effected easily, so that these fine buildings and works of art of days that are gone will be provinced foundations. be preserved from the inevitable decay which would otherwise soon destroy them.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The following resolution of the Government of India was published at Simla on the 5th of August:

The embarrassment occasioned to the finances of this empire by the present disturbances in the relative values of gold and silver has, for some time past, been under the anxious consideration of the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, and his Excellency has been led by such consideration to the conclusion that it is now advisable to notify to the local Government the wishes of the Government of India in regard to those pre-liminary measures of retrenchment and economy which are necessitated by the immediate exigencies of the financial situation.

2. It was a part of the Budget arrangements of this year that the Secretary of State in Council should borrow in England £2,640,000, for the construction of Extraordinary Public Works. An incidental effect of that arrangement was to reduce, by the above mentioned sum, the amount that must otherwise have been raised by bills for the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and recording to the state of the supply of the Home Treatment and the su sury, and, according to the rate of exchange assumed in the estimatesviz., one rupee, equal to 1s. 84d.—to diminish the entry under Loss by Exchange, and improve the nominal balance of the year by 45,00,000 rupees. Notwithstanding this and other advantages, the surplus revenue of the year was estimated at only 14,40,000 rupees.

3. It was calculated at that time that the supply of £13,660,000 to the Home Treasury by bills would cost 15,99,20,000 rupees; and accordingly the sum of 2,33,20,000 rupees was provided under the adjusting head "Loss by Exchange." Subsequently, however, to the publication of the estimates, the Secretary of State found it convenient to increase the amount borrowed in England to £4,000,000. The incidental relief to the estimates of the year from this source would thus be, if the rate of exchange could be calculated as before, 68,30,000 rupees. The relief obtained may now be estimated at a much larger sum. In judging of the financial position and future prospects of the Government of India, it is necessary to bear this fact in mind.

this fact in mind.

4. The sum to be raised in England having been thus increased, the amount to be supplied to the Home Treasury by bills during the year is now reduced to £12,300,000, of which £3,344,134 has been obtained to date by the sale of bills for 4,06,10,000 rupees, the adjustment entered under Loss by Exchange being already 71,68,660 rupees.

5. It is at present impossible to frame any approximate estimate of the cest in rupees, of supplying to the Home Treasure of £8,056,148.

cost, in rupees, of supplying to the Home Treasury the sum of £8,956,440, which still remains to be raised by bills; but the Government of India cannot now expect that the whole entry under Loss by Exchange will not be largely in excess of the grant.

6. Moreover, the prospects of the customs revenue are, by reason of the adverse exchange, unfavourable; the charge for interest will be increased for the increased amount borrowed in England; and the cost of the unprecedentedly large opium crop in Bengal is expected to cause the expenditure under opium to exceed the grant by about 50,00,000 rupees; although there will, of course, be a corresponding addition to the opium in reserve.

7. Altogether, the financial prospects give cause for such grave anxiety that the Governor-General in Council deems it necessary to invite the earnest co-operation of the local governments and heads of departments in the threatened deficit.

reducing, by every possible means, the threatened deficit.

8. The authorities at the head of each department, whether administered by the Imperial or Local Government, should therefore take prompt measures to stop all outlay of public money which is not absolutely neces sary, or to which the Government is not committed, or the discontinuance of which will not cause disproportionate loss and waste. An early report should be made to the Government of India in the Financial Department of the measures adopted for giving effect to these instructions, and of the saving which may be expected under each Government and in each department. The Governor-General in Council will be unable to sanction any new expenditure that is not indispensable.

9. The financial disorder which demands these measures is exclusively due to the recent rapid fall of the value of silver in relation to gold, and the consequent enhancement of the cost in silver of all payments in gold. The Governor-General in Council is not prepared at present to say what measures the Government of India may be compelled to take in order to permanently restore the financial equilibrium; but, pending the adoption of such measures, it is incumbent on his Excellency in Council to warn all local Governments that he may be reluctantly compelled to call upon them for sacrifices which, if requisite for the public welfare, those Governments will, he feels assured, be ready to accept in the loyal and generous spirit evinced by them on previous occasions of great financial pressure.

10. The Governor-General in Council has resolved, for the present, largely to reduce the expenditure on Extraordinary Public Works, and in regard to many of the measures which may be necessary to effect that object he confides in the valuable assistance of the local Governments.

11. Moreover, the means at the disposal of the Government of India for granting loans to municipal and other corporations, and to native States or private persons, are, so long as the present state of things last, likely to be limited; and therefore no application for such loans should be made or forwarded by any Government officer, except for purposes which admit of no postponement.

STATION TALK.

CALCUTTA, July 30.—Mr. Phear leaves India for good on the 10th August. Before his departure he will receive an entertainment of some sort from the natives of Calcutta. The Bar gave him a dinner which proves that he has lived down the dislike they once entertained for him, and which culminated at the time of the

"Meares" case. Mr. Phear will be pretty generally regretted, but chiefly by the natives, to whom he has always been particularly gracious, not always with a judicious regard for what he owed to his own countrymen. Mr. Justice McDonell, v.c., has left Calcutta to rejoin his substantive appointment at Patna, very much to the regret of all who knew him here. Justices Jackson and Glover are also away on leave, and considering that the work of the High Court is notoriously in arrears, it seems impossible to understand the object of Government in suddenly sending off Mr. McDonell, in spite, moreover, of the protests of the Chief Justice. The only good end that can be served by such false economy of labour will be to show conclusively the impracticability of the scheme rumour attributes to the Marquis of Salisbury, of reducing the number of High Court judges to one-half. What with Lord Lytton's unconstitutional and unfounded strictures on the High Court of the North-West Provinces, and the evident anxiety of Government to discredit, by disarming, the High Court here, English justice in India runs a fair chance of falling into contempt. As regards the Fuller matter, it is no secret in Cdcutta that Sir R. Garth has officially communicated with Sir R. Stuart as to the action to be taken by the latter in support of the authority of his court, and it is reported that the reply to Lord Lytton's minute will be couched in no subservient The general feeling here is very strong on the subject. We are to be spared for a space the infliction of the new association for the public benefit, the meeting of which I told you last week was held on Wednesday evening, and after a few remarks from the projectors and considerable noise from the audience, the more respectable among them went home, and the subsequent proceedings interested no one. The Lacy case, lately tried at Bombay, has with all its unsavoury details been republished at length in our local prints. The relationship which existed between the delectable couple is neither novel nor altogether without its romantic side, as, indeed, has been discovered by more than one versitier of merit. For the matter of that, the Lacy pair might well have stood for the original of a poem which the curious will find buried in an edition of juvenile verses written by a very exalted personage, now resident in this country.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE TRANSFER OF DR. SHEPPARD .- Dr. Sheppard, who has for many years been principal assistant at the Benares opium agency, is, it is reported, shortly to be transferred to the Patna Agency, and Dr. Whitwell will be appointed to Benares.—Englishman, Aug. 5.

SCARCITY OF RAIN IN PATNA.—From the latest district reports from the Patna division, for the week ended the 29th of July, we see that though showers had been general there had not been sufficient rain for planting out the rice, and the time for doing so was rapidly passing.—Englishman, Aug. 3.

THE PRICE OF WHEAT.—Our Cawnpore correspondent tells us below that wheat is at this moment selling at that great emporium of the North-West at twenty-six seers the rupee. At the present rate of exchange this is about eighteen shillings per quarter, or onethird of the price commonly prevailing in England for years together. - Calcutta Statesman, Aug. 5.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—Sir Stuart Hogg, with his accustomed good luck, had a narrow escape yesterday morning. He was going to office in his well-known "tomtom," his coachman being alongside of him, and having the reins in his hand, when, the horse suddenly swerving, the vehicle was capsized, and both occupants thrown out. Sir Stuart got off with scarcely a bruise, but the coachman is said to have been somewhat more hurt.—Englishman, Aug. 4.

FAREWELL ENTERTAINMENT TO MR. JUSTICE PHEAR.-A farewell entertainment to this gentleman, who is soon about to leave these shores, was given by Babus Bhuggobatty Churn Mullic and Benode Behary Mullick, on Monday evening, at Cross-street. Barra Bazar. Among those present were Sir Richard Temple, Sir Richard Garth, General Ross, and a large number of the elite of Calcutta society, including several ladies.—Englishman, Aug. 4.

A Feminine Visitor to England.—The Labor paper informs us that the Begam Khurshaid Jahan of Rampur in Robilkand, who is locally known as the "Ara Begum," is about to proceed to England for the respective to the state of the size of the state of the size of the size for the purpose of pressing her complaint and claim on the notice of the Secretary of State; and, if necessary, of appealing to her Majesty. This lady is a near relative of the Nawab of Rampur, who stood so well and staunchly by us during the mutiny of 1857.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.—The air is thick with rumours, more or less threatening to the prospects of the Civil Service, and, most of our readers will think, ominous of ill for the future of our administration. Though there may be no truth in the statement that the local government has proposed to place a native in charge of one of the Bengal districts, there is every reason to believe that a considerable proportion of the district judgeships will, before long, be filled with native incumbents. We also hear that a scheme for the reduction of the High Court to half its present strength is under the consideration of the Secretary of State, if it is not already on its way out with his sanction.—Englishman.

PATIALA.—A Panjab native paper states that it is rumoured at Patiala that the Khalifa Sayyad Muhammad Hassan has been nominated President of a Council of Regency, consisting of himself, Sardar Dewan Buta Singh, Muhammad Namdar Khan, and Chaudhri Charrat Singh.

RAILWAY RETRENCHMENTS .- Rumours have lately been heard to RAILWAY RETREACHMENTS.—Rumours have latery been heard to the effect that considerable reductions of expenditure, in connection with the East India Railway, are still in contemplation. The num-ber of permanent engineers is likely to be reduced, and the circles of district engineers are to be extended, on the ground that the whole length of the line is now complete and is in full working order. The system of pre audit is likely to give place to that of post audit, as in the Government Account Offices.—Indian Daily News.

An Afridi Ambush.—The Delhi Gazette learns that, on the morning of the 15th July, a water party, consisting of three bhistis, four mules, two sipahis, and two sawars, were surprised by a party of Afridis, in ambush, about three quarters of a mile away from Fort Muhammadzai (Kohat). The first volley fired killed one sipahi, and the other was knocked down by a bullet entering his pouch and blowing up his ammunition. The enemy escaped, taking the deceased sipahi's rifle, accoutrements, ammunition, and even clothing, also the four mules.

-We are sure that his many friends in the COLONEL MAISEY .army and his friends in India, especially at Simla, will regret that such a favourite is about to leave the scene of official life as Colonel Maisey. A most able man in office, a popular man in society, Colonel Maisey retires amidst the regrets of friends and no known enemies. His services show that he has done hard and good work in the field, and at the desk his labours have been not less valuable. His treatise on Military Law is now a recognised standard text book .- Times of India, Aug. 11.

Mr. Phear and the Attorneys.—On Saturday the Attorneys of the High Court met Mr. Justice Phear in the Library of the Judges, to present him with an address, expressing their high appreciation of him as a Judge. The Government Solicitor being unavoidably absent, Mr. Gillanders, the oldest Attorney on the rolls then present, read the address, after which Mr. Justice Phear made an appropriate reply. The address was beautifully illuminated on parchment, and encased in a piece of bamboo curiously ornamented with gold and silver, and bearing Mr. Justice Phear's monogram, the workmanship of Messrs. Madeley and Co.—Englishman, Aug. 7.

DEATH OF MR. THACKER.—We regret to hear that Mr. Thacker, the lately-appointed Remount Agent in Calcutta, died on the 25th June at Melbourne, where he was sent about three months ago by the Indian Government to purchase for stud purposes. Mr. Thacker and Mr. Collins were sent out to India by the Home Government during the latter part of 1871, to fill two vacancies in the Veterinary Department. Both were kept idle for eighteen months after they reached the country, until the discussion between the Home and Indian Governments as to the purpose for which they were sent out was ended. Mr. Thacker was subsequently sent to officiate as Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon in Calcutta for a short time, and afterwards he became officiating Remount Agent, in which appointment he was only lately confirmed. The post of Remount Agent is now vacant, and as there will be many applicants for that appointment, it behoves Government to weigh well the qualifications of the man they select to fill it.—Times of India, Aug. 11.

RELEASED CONVICTS IN OUDH .- Released convicts are becoming so numerous in Oudh that in the opinion of the Inspector-General of Police it has become practically impossible for the police to watch Registers are kept in all police stations in which the names of all suspicious characters, and particularly of released convicts, are entered; and if these men misconduct themselves so as to call for police interference the police can immediately discover who they are from these registers. The Chief Commissioner, however, does not agree with the Inspector-General of Police that it is unnecessary for the police to watch released convicts. course, absurd that they should be called upon to see to the future of a man whose sole crime has been to get into a house with the view of winning the good graces of his neighbour's wife; but men who have been convicted of crimes against society, and especially professional criminals, should be carefully and jealously looked after on their release from jail.'

THE FENNUAH SCANDAL.—We take the liberty to direct the attention of the Government and of the High Court to an article that appeared in the Indian Mirror of yesterday, concerning certain proceedings of Mr. Kirkwood at Chittagong, in what seems to be known in that district as the Fennuah scandal. The paper is written with much of the absurd exaggeration that marks all native stories of wrong; but it is not difficult to see that there is a substratum of fact therein that impeaches Mr. Kirkwood heavily, and that ought to be inquired into, the more so as it seems that several villagers are in jail in Chittagong for having given evidence against a Mr. Webster, whom Mr. Kirkwood is charged with championing against the local Magistrate, by whom Mr. Webster had been fined Rs. 500 for a riot he hal created. If the facts are as described, Mr. Kirkwood ought to be removed from active employ. The High Court should, we submit, call for the record of all the proceedings in the case.—Calcuttu Statesman, Aug. 4.

THE WEATHER AND CROPS.—The reports on the state of the sea son and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 3rd August state that in Madras the fall of rain has been scanty in the Northern and Central districts, and prospects have not improved. In Mysore there has been slight but beneficial rain throughout the province. In Bombay good rain has fallen in most districts, but more is required in Khandeish, most of the Deccan districts, Kaladghee, and part of Dharwar. In Sind the river is high, canals full, and prospects good. In the Central Provinces there has been generally abundant rain, but more is wanted in Bundara and Nagpore. More rain is required in Berar. The falls throughout Central India and Rajpootana have been good. In Bengal favourable rain has fallen, except in Behar, where it is still insufficient in some districts; prospects are excellent in Bengal proper; in Behar the transplantation of the winter rice is backward, but other crops are good. Copious rain has fallen throughout the North-Western Provinces, Oudh, and the Punjab, and prospects are favourable.

THE CIVIL SERVANTS' GRIEVANCES .- The Allahabad papers of the 9th August published the following telegram from Simla, dated August 7th:-

The Government of India received by yesterday's mail (July 14) the Secretary of State's despatch on Civilians' Grievances:—

The arrangements sanctioned fall short of the confident expectations embodied in a frecent letter circulated from Naini Tal. They may be summed up as follows:—In non-regulation provinces a limited number of military officers may retire on the terms of the General Order of the 1st of January, in excess of the G.O. already sanctioned, the offer to include officers not within two years of colonels allowances, during the current year

Any civilian concluding twenty years' service or more may retire on a pension proportioned to one thousand a year as his service to twenty-five years; the amount by which a pension so computed exceeds five hundred a year may be capitalised. This provision will possibly extend beyond the North-West Provinces.

Special allowances will be sanctioned for a period of five years only to ries for length of service has been permitted. New districts have been sanctioned for the North-West Provinces, provided only that their creation lead to no increase in the cost of administration.

New appointments in all non-regulation commissions of the Punjab, Oudh, and Central Provinces included, are reserved in future for civilians on the same rules as apply to regulation provinces. The theory that the old circulars of C.S. Commission pledge the Government is emphatically repudiated.

To military officers in non-regulation districts the Secretary of State's despatch offers a bonus of one year's pay to seniors retiring.

Public Meeting in Calcutta.—A very largely attended meeting of the native inhabitants of Calcutta was held last Wednesday evening at the Albert Hall, for the purpose of establishing an association with the view to represent the people and other objects. The meeting was a very orderly one when it was opened, but the fun waxed fast and furious when the third speaker rose in opposition, and became a most disorderly one as it progressed. Order was utterly disregarded: hissing, hooting, howling, stamping of feet, and other agreeable and diverting scenes, constituted a medley which it has fallen to the late of familiary to the late of th which it has fallen to the lot of few to witness. The reasons for forming this new association were said by the first speaker, a Baboo, to be that the Bengal Social Science Association was not a representative institutior. The proposed association would neither be the British Indian Association itself, although it would perform the functions which that association performed. It would neither be a Social Science Association, although it would perform the function of one. It would therefore be a new thing, and would unite two functions which were not possessed by any one of the two associations he had named, and would yet be distinct in itself. There was another consideration which led him to think that they ought to have a new association, and that was, that the younger ages of educated native ought to have political life, having no such constitution The third speaker irritated his hearers, and we read in at present. the report that soon after he had finished, the uproar then was a "caution." Nothing could be heard for some few minutes. Baboo Kristo Das Pal and Baboo Koonjoolall Banarjee, the learned Second Judge of the Small Cause Court, here rose, and with difficulty made their way out of the hall, followed by cries of "Turn them out," "No, no," "Kick them out." The resolutions were, however, eventually carried, and the chairman received "a vote of thanks."—Bambay Gazette, Aug. 4.

University Senate House.—Our University Senate House is fast progressing, and it will not be long ere the finishing stroke is applied to it. It is said that it will be completed by the end of August, and that the Governor will be asked to open it early the following month. -Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

RESIGNATION OF A CAPTAIN FOR A WINE TRADE.—Captain De-Lancey Gostling, M.S.C. and of the Nair Brigade in Travancore, has recently been struck off the strength of the Madras army and of the Nair Brigade, he having lately resigned her Majesty's Service for the more lucrative pursuit of the wine trade, in partnership with a Mr. Earle, who has the largest business in Chelmsford.—Cochin Argus.

RANGOON.-From Rangoon we hear that news from Mandalay is of a very sad nature. Letters from the Golden City announce the fact that the bund-works of his Majesty of the numerous White Elephants have given way, being unable to resist the waters of the Irrawaddy, the consequence being that the city is almost inundated. Fortunately the burst occurred at mid-day, or the distress would have been ten-fold; as it is, matters are described as something awful, hundreds of houses have been swept away and thousands rendered homeless .- Athenœum, Aug. 9.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN BIEBER.—We regret to announce the death at Bangalor of Captain Bieber, of the 13th Hussars. The unfortunate gentleman met with an accident a few days ago by falling out of the railway train in which he was proceeding to Bugalor—the door of the carriage, it is said, having unexpectedly opened while Captain Bieber was leaning against it. It was hoped at first that he would recover, but the injuries received proved of too serious a nature, and he succumbed at 7 P.M. on Sunday last, all that medical skill could perform having proved unavailing.—Athenœum, Aug. 9.

FLOODS IN MANGALORE.—From information supplied us by our correspondent at Mangalore, it appears that the damage done there by the late heavy rains is large. About three hundred houses have been washed away; 36,000 maunds of salt have been more or less injured; three lives are reported to have been lost, and the damages are estimated at nothing under a lakh of rupees. floods appear to have had pretty wide scope, as damages are reported to have occurred about fifteen miles away from Mangalore. hope, in a few days, to be put in possession of full particulars of the recent floods in Mangalore.—Madras Standard, Aug. 7.

PROBABLE CAMP OF EXERCISE.—It is rumoured in well-informed military circles that Sir Neville Chamberlain, our Commander-in-Chief, has decided that a Camp of Exercise shall be held at Bangalor or Bellary some time in November next, and arrangements are being made for the carrying out of the measure. Only British and native troops serving in this presidency, or belonging to the Madras Army, will be present at the Camp of Exercise, which, whether held at Bangalor or Bellary, will be formed in two divisions and four briales. The commanding officers have not been named yet; in fact, do not believe that they have been any of them selected yet.

Mr. Shaw.—After nine years of persevering and unremitting toil, which have borne golden fruit, Mr. F. Shaw, originally the Superintendent of the "Kowdiar' estate in South Travancore, but now one of the wealthiest planters in South Travancore, is about to visit the shores of his native land in search of rest and respite from labour. By dint of sheer application and unceasing work, Mr. Shaw acquired a thorough knowledge of coffee planting in all its branches, and many a beginner in the industry resorts now-a-days to him for instruction and advice. Mr. Shaw is much liked by his brother planters, and his counsels will be lost for some time to the Travancore Planters' Association .- Western Star.

Mr. Chisholm.—We understand that Mr. Melvill, C.S.I., Agent to the Governor-General at Baroda, has, at the request of Sir T. Madhava Row, applied to the Madras Government for the services of Mr. Chisholm, the Government Architect who is shortly expected to arrive at Madras, via Bombay, from England. Sir T. Madhava Row intends erecting a High School at Baroda, for which he wants Mr. Chisholm to devise a plan. An honorarium of Re. 500 has been offered for his services, and the expenses to and from Baroda. In consequence of a great deal of work being held in abeyance on account of Mr. Chisholm's absence, the Madras Government have expressed their regret in not being able to spare Mr. Chisholm's services.—Madras Mail, Aug. 3.

POLICE RETURNS.—Government have published a report of the murders committed in the Madras presidency—Mysor, Travancore and Cochin excepted-during the past official year, from which it appears that 265 murders were committed during 1875-76, or about the same number of the previous year-269. In 30 cases the murderers committed suicide; 90 cases were prosecuted to conviction. Deducting the cases in which justice was frustrated by the suicide of the murderers, 38.3 per cent. of murders committed were detected and brought to conviction, and 137 persons were convicted in the 90 cases. The average of persons convicted to persons arrested is 24.7 per cent. Although the aggregate detective results do not reach a high standard, they nevertheless bear comparison with the results in England in all respects other than the proportion of persons convicted to persons arrested.

THE GOVERNOR.—It is probable that His Grace the Duke of Buckingham will not return to the capital as early as it was thought as he contemplates a somewhat lengthy tour. The Duke of Buckingham has not been many months in the Presidency, but it seems evident that in a very short time he will have seen for himself more of the country he governs than did his predecessors during the whole term of their office. His Grace, it is rumoured, proposes a tour of an exhaustive nature through Wynaad and Malabar and thence to Mysore, visiting Seringapatam and Bangalore en route. These are very important districts, and his Grace will have thus the opportunity of seeing for himself, and hearing the opinion of the residents thereabouts. His Grace has not yet determined upon paying a visit to the state prisoner at Nellore, the Rajah of Palcondah.—Athenæum.

THE INAM COMMISSION.—The total cost of the Inam Commission since its formation is not expected to exceed thirteen lakhs of rupees -a sum the reverse of excessive when the highly satisfactory results attained are considered. Landed property in which not less than 2½ million persons are in some measure interested, and extending to nearly 5½ millions of acres in area, which was lately held in defective and doubtful titles, and which paid to the revenue less than one-tenth of the regulated land assessment, has now been confirmed to the holders on indefeasible Government titles, and the measure has resulted in a clear gain to the revenue of about eight laks of rupees per annum. The alienation of State revenue has been considerably reduced, and at the same time contentment has been diffused throughout the whole body of the Inamdars, a class which numbers probably upwards of a million in-lividuals in this presidency.—Madras Standard, Aug. 4.

RUMOURED VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF ARKOT.—The subject of conversation in respectable Mohammedan circles just now is the (reported) approaching visit of the Prince of Arcot to England. The present Prince, who, by-the-way, is a nephew of the late Prince Azim Jah, who fought so persistently, but failed so signally, to be recognised by the Government, both here and at home, as Nabob of the Carnatic, proceeds to England with his secretary, Hyder Jung Bahadoor, who was also secretary to the late Prince, and the prime mover in his unfortunate, though undoubtedly honest, cause to reopen the question of family claim to the Nabobship. The Prince has some powerful friends in Parliament just now, who have been solicited and have promised to move, second, and support a resolution in the House to the effect that, "A humble address be presented to her Imperial Majesty praying that she may be graciously pleased to recognise the claims of the Prince of Arkot to the title and dignity of Nabob of the Carnatic, and to the rights, privileges, and revenues thereunto belonging." Among these friends in Parliament, though by no means the most influential among them, is Sir George Balfour, late of the Madras Artillery, who is intimately acquainted with the history of the Carnatic family. Sir George is the brother of Surgeon-General Balfour, the present head of the Indian Medical Department of the Madras Presidency, who for many years held the appointment of Government Agent at Chepauk, the residence of the late Prince, as well as the appointment of Paymaster of Carnatic Stipends. Dr. Balfour will himself be in England very shortly, and his evidence will be of considerable importance to the Prince. The general belief among the Mohammedans is that the Prince's claim will be acknowledged on a reconsideration of the subject; and that reinstation will follow, while some among them think that he will not be restored to the musnud but will receive some personal compensat-

Dr. CALDWELL'S EXPLORATIONS IN TINNEVELLY.—The Reverend Dr. Caldwell having made some excavations lately at Korkei and Kayal, in the Tinnevelly District, has reported the results to the Collector. He found no traces of the Greeks at Korkei, but many proofs of the antiquity and extent of the place. It was always at a depth of eight feet below the present level of the village that he came upon traces of the ancient town. It was at a depth of only three feet at Kayal. The only things he discovered were, small fragments of Indian pottery at Korkei, and of China and Arabian were at Kayal. He came upon the floor of a house brick with polished chunam three feet below the ground, in the Kayal plain, about a mile from the village, but the only discovery was some broken curry-stuff grinders. In all that region the alluvium of the delta is full of sea shells, and when you dig through the alluvium, which in some places is only three or four feet in thickness, you invariably come upon white sea sand, the surface of which to a depth of about a foot has been indurated into a good stone, which the people call Ooppoo-cal (salt stone); through the infiltration of the alluvium. Dr. Caldwell collected a few handsfull of the various kinds of shells, which include chanks and pearl oysters, both deep sea shells; so great is the number of the shells that they crackle under your feet as you walk along the shells roads. In the lowest part of the tank at Koreik there are a great number of sepulchral urns; he dug out one, which measured eleven feet in circumference. It had already broken into three portions. It contained a perfect human skull with apparently a complete set of the bones of a skeleton, but only one Kalasam. At another place two were dug out, one of which is nearly entire. One contained one were dug out, one of which is nearly entire. One contained one Kalasam, the others two, but neither contained any bones. They had all been calcined was evident from the traces left. On the whole Dr. Caldwell found the geology of Korkei more interesting than its antiquities. The following is a list of the things found:—One sepulchral urn, four small Kalasams (small earthern pots), specimens of broken Chinese pottery, specimens of Arabian pottery broken, sea shells contained in the alluvium of the delta and in the sea sand underneath, three broken curry-stuff crinders, two conner sea sand underneath, three broken curry-stuff grinders, two copper coins, one wholly defaced, the other retaining a few traces of drapery which show it to be a Singhalese coin .- Mudres Times.

STATION TALK.

Broach, July 26.—Of late we have had good showers of rain. The monsoon has at last set in and everyone is gratified. We have had in all about fifteen inches of rain, which is something like the half of our usual average. Cotton plantations are all throughout in first-rate condition as well as other crops. . . . Broach at present has but very few features of interest. Everything is dull and calm as a resting wheel. One sees nothing but muddy streets and rows of houses—a sight that is not calculated to make one feel cheerful. The cotton season has run its busy career, and so the life, bustle, and din incidental to it is wanting to enliven the town. The various gins and presses with their deafening noise, their roaring fires, and their sooty chimneys smoking away fast and furious, are all hushed and silent. They look dreary and deserted, and there is nothing to break the solemn monotony. To compensate as it were for so much dulness, the municipality is active. Under an able and painstaking president like Mr. White, the municipality bids fair to shake off its usual dulness and to rouse for some praiseworthy activity. The newly-nominated secretary, Mr. Sorabjee Pallanjee, looks well after sanitary reforms. He is seen daily in his cart or on foot going through every street and trying to keep the town as clean as possible. Notwithstanding all this there are not wanting some discontented souls who will tell you that the Municipal Secretary has not done all that he ought to, and that he should push on the reforms more vigourously, as if the Augean dirt of a decade and a half could be swept out in the short period of a year or thereabouts. But finding fault is a very favourite amusement with your half-educated natives. I can boldly say that the present Municipal Secretary is a very zealous young man, and if he sticks to his principle of carrying on his work, and is allowed fair play, I am sure he will in a short time show the people of Broach the great utility of Municipal establishments, as a very large number of people here are not quite agreed upon that point. upon that point. The most enterprising member of the European community here, Mr. Cotton, a partner of the well-known firm of Messrs. Greaves, Cotton and Co., of Bombay, has just declared that handsome dividends will be paid by the several cotton-ginning and spinning mills of which his firm are secretaries and treasurers. The lately erected spinning mill here works very well. Hundreds of bales of cotton are spun into yarn and hundreds of men earn their livelihood thereby. Mr. Cotton always strives to give a good dividend to his shareholders. It is under contemplation to have a weaving mill attached to the spinning, and I am sure the scheme will be carried out by the energy and exertions of Mr. Cotton. Mr. Cotton is not only efficient in his mercantile capacity, but as a Chairman of the Municipal Managing Committee he is second to none. During the time he was Chairman he worked right honestly with zeal and energy for the good of the public. He has made many improvements and was very particular in consulting the feelings of the natives regarding municipal reforms.

AHMADABAD, July 31.—We still continue to have plenty of rain, and the weather is pleasantly cool. However, the season is not healthy, there being a good deal of sickness about, and I hear of many bad cases of cholera in the city. I suppose at the commencement of the monsoon that epidemic generally appears with more or less violence in the unwholesome overcrowded gullies of a native city, and it takes a thoroughly good drenching to wash it away. By the way, I noticed that a correspondent from here had remarked that the English ploughs which were introduced into this neighbourhood, some time ago were not now in use among the cultivators. He has made a mistake, because, in the small Christian village of Shawaddi, which is within a mile or two of Ahmedabad, there are nineteen English ploughs in constant use, and so much are they appreciated for their superiority over the native ploughs that the cultivators in adjacent villages are anxious to obtain them. The introduction of these implements into Shawaddi is due to the exertions of the missionaries of the Irish Presbyterian Church.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

JUBBULPOR, July 30.—Though we have had some heavy showers of rain, cholera is still prevailing virulently, and there appears to be no signs of its decrease. The plague first made its appearance in the city, and immediately European soldiers and policemen were posted along the railway embankment which separates the city from the Sudder Bazaar and military cantonments. The Sudder Bazaar was at first free from the disease, but subsequently cholera made its appearance there also. In the Church Mission compound, which is situated on the very confines of the station, some deaths occurred among the poor native Christians. Up till now there has been no lessening of the evil, from twenty to thirty deaths occurring daily in the city and its suburbs. The energetic Deputy-Commissioner and the indefatigable Civil Surgeon, Dr. Rice, have done all that could possibly be done to prevent the breaking out of the epidemic, and when it did make its appearance the best arrangements for checking its spread were effected. The weekly market, known as the "Gorinda Bazaar," was closed—all large gatherings of people prohibited—the clothes, &c., of cholera-stricken persons have been forthwith burnt, and every corrective measure has been, and is still being, taken, but with little avail up till now. It is a dispensation of Providence, and we must bear it as best we may. Very heavy showers have again fallen during the last two days, and it is hoped that this wil lcheck the plague materially. All credit is due to our Civil wil Icheck the plague materially. All credit is due to our Civil Surgeon, Dr. Rice, as also to the Assistant Surgeon, Baboo Rhadeknath, to the native doctor, Thakoor Pershad, and to their subordinates, for their active exertions (which are still unabated) during this trying occasion, and I believe it is the general public hope that their services will receive the due acknowledgments of the Chief Commissioner. Cholera from the cantonments has entirely disappeared, but is still ravaging with undiminished virulence the population of the native town and suburbs. The Municipality are doing their utmost to check the plague. Yesterday the Hindoo festival of Nagur Punchmi, at which season wrestling matches are held everywhere at the various wrestling rings, or, as the natives call them, Akadas. There was an official order that no matches were to be held in public, on account of the large gathering of spectators that such exhibitions draw together; so the athletes assembled in private enclosures, and the games were carried on with the usual vigour and earnestness, which was by no means abated by the cholera panic which just now prevails everywhere. It was astonishing to see to what herculean proportions the native is capable of being developed. Amongst a number of the Pehlwans there was all the muscular beauty of a Heenan or a Sayers, but whether they possess the relative stamina is another thing. As it was they flung each other about with a strength that was surprising; a wrestler thinking nothing of seizing his antagonist, fully fifteen stone in weight, and throwing him bodily to a distance of several yards. is to be hoped the authorities will encourage these games of strength, as it tends to make the native improve his physical constitution, which is sadly needed among the lanky, hollow-thighed inhabitants of India. There was a sharp thunderstorm last week at Sleemanabad, where a thunder-bolt fell, killing a little child three years old.

CHOLERA AT TANNA.—We are glad to learn that cholera has almost entirely subsided at Tanna. There were several cases on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last, the proportion of deaths to attacks being very high, but the epidemic apparently has left Tanna as suddenly as it appeared.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

LEGAL.—The Hon. Mr. Nanabhai Haridas, Acting Judge of the High Court, has been nominated Government Pleader, Appellate Side, in room of the late Mr. Dhirujlal Mathuradas, and the Hon. Mr. Vishwanath Narayen Mandlick, one of the additional members of the flocal Legislative Council, has been appointed Acting Government Pleader. Both of these gentlemen have accepted the offers made to them by his Excellency the Governor in Council.

THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL JOHNSTONE.—Our readers will have read with deep sorrow the accounts given in the English papers of the death of Major-General Robert Maxwell Johnstone, who only a short time ago retired from the command of H.M.'s 1st Grenadiers' N.I. We are indeed grieved to learn that his widow and children (a girl and two boys) have been left in reduced circumstances. proposed to help Mrs. Johnstone at this crisis by giving her daughter, Miss Mary Johnstone, a presentation to the School at Bath for the Daughters of Officers of the Army. Generals Younghusband and Piece at Clifton are doing all that they can at home to raise funds for this purpose, and we hear that Colonel Sandwith, Commanding H.M.'s 8th N.I., is doing all that he can at this station to interest the friends of General Johnstone in the same object. Mr. Johnstone, the Agent of the Branch Bank of Bombay at this station, has kindly consented to receive subscriptions in aid of this project. It would indeed be gratifying to Mrs. Johnstone to learn that her late husband's friends in the Poona Camp and Bazaar had aided in this matter. There are many still here who remember the kind warm hearted General with affection, and who would grieve to think of his family being left without a liberal education; there are many, moreover, who have received a variety of kindnesses from Major General and Mrs. Johnstone; these, we trust, will show their regard for his family, now that he is gone beyond the reach of their friendship. We trust that there will be no difficulty in making up the sum required, and that the friends of General Johnstone will make the task which Colonel Sandwith and Mr. Johnstone have so generously undertaken as light as they possibly can, by coming forward spontareously with their aid in this good work.—Decean Herald.

THE JEDDAH PILGRIM TRADE.—The following letter from the Chamber of Commerce has been forwarded to Earl Derby. lates to the Jeddah pilgrim trade, and is accompanied by a letter from Mr. Hajee Abdoolraman Allaruka, too long for insertion here:—To the Right Hon. the Earl of Derby, H.M.'s Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.—May it please your Lordship,—We have the honour, by direction of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, to forward, for the information of your Lordship, a printed letter, dated the 6th ult., addressed to this Chamber by Hajee Abdoolraman Allaruka, together with printed copies of the documents therein referred to. The alleations made in these documents seem to be well substantiated, and to disclose an abuse of authority on the part of the Consul and Vice-Consul at Jeddah, which ought to be put a stop to. It appears to the Chamber that the case is one eminently requiring investigation, and we are, therefore, desired respectfully to express the hope that your Lordship will be pleased to order an inquiry to be instituted into the charges. Should these prove to be true, the Chamber can only express its regret that the British name should have been disgraced in the eyes of the native merchants and people of Jeddah by the conduct of the British representative. The Chamber also desires to avail itself of this opportunity of respectfully urging upon your Lordship's consideration whether it is not desirable that the Consul and Vice Consul at Jeddah should be prohibited from engaging in any kind of trade or mercantile dealings. Heretofore, the Consuls at Jeddah had always been non-trading Consuls, restricted exclusively to the duties of their Consular office; and, by their straightforward conduct, they stood high in the estimation of the races among whom they were placed. The trade of Jeddah, which is frequented yearly by numerous Hindoo and other merchauts, and by immense numbers of pilgrims, who are British subjects, is large and important, and ought to be sufficient, without his engaging in mercantile pursuits, to fully occupy the time and attention of the Consul; and the Chamber would on this account—to say nothing of the inexpediency of allowing the Consul to trade at a place so distant from head-quarters—respectfully suggest that the permission apparently accorded to him to engage in mercan-tile transactions be withdrawn.—We have the honour to be, your Lordship's most faithful and obedient servants, George F. HENRY, Chairman; J. Gordon, Secretary.

The Bishop of Bombay and the Bishop of Colombo.—On Sunday in some of the churches in Bombay a circular letter was read from the Bishop of Bombay in regard to the dispute at present pending between the Bishop of Colombo and the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in Ceylon. At Sonapore the Rev. Charles Gilder said:—Under the authority contained in the letter from the bishop which I am about to read, I ask your attention to the subject referred to by his lordship, and ask you to unite your prayers with those of the clergy for the attainment of the end put forth in the circular. Mr. Gilder then read the following letter:—

"Poona, August 1st, 1876, Rev. and dear Sir,—The unhappy difficulties which have arisen between my Brother of Colombo and the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in Ceylon appear to me to be of sufficient importance to make it advisable that I should ask for the special prayers of the clergy that God may bring them to a happy issue. Any permanent breach between the Society and a single bishop of the Church would be so deplorable an event that we might well unite our prayers to avert such a calamity. But in the present instance the principle which is at stake in the controversy seems to me to be so vital that a formal wrong decision upon it might cause evils which would not be confined to a single diocese or province. Of the details of this unhappy division I say nothing. The principle that every Bishop must be referred to by all the clergy of his diocese, as having a right to some control over all church-workers, is one which must be firmly maintained. At the same time I cannot conceal from myself that the Church in times past his so delegated her missionary work into the hands of voluntary societies that she is bound to exercise great caution and to show most tender consideration in requiring through her bishops the concession of her unquestionable right. May I therefore beg of you to be diligent in praying to Almighty God that he will be pleased to avert any ultimate ill consequences which might flow from the present difficulty, and so to overrule the counsels both of the Bishops and of the Church Missionary Society that no demand may be put forward on either side which might lead to fresh complications and embroil other diocesses. If you think it desirable to plications and embroil other dioceses. If you think it desirable to read this letter in the face of your congregation and esk them to join in this prayer, I shall be very glad that you should do so.—I am, yours faithfully in Christ, Louis George, Bishop of Boml ay.'— Times of India, Aug. 11.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. -At a quarterly meeting of the general committee of the Bombay Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals held, at the Town Hall, on Wednesday last, presided over by the Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley, the progress of the Society's work during the four months ending 30th June last was pronounced "remarkably good." Ac-cording to the statement submitted by Mr. Kaikhosro Nowrojee Kabrajee, one of the honorary secretaries, the Society has secured 153 magisterial convictions during the period, obtained by the agents, 92 cases in which cautions were administered; and 41 more cases in which the usual notices were served on the Municipality relating to bullocks badly used by drivers and others in its employment. Comparing this result with that of the preceding quarter, the meeting was reminded that it wanted only 21 more cases to make up in these four months what was achieved by the Society for the whole of the year ending 31st March last, the total convictions for that year amounting to 174, whilst those for the past four months numbered 153. The amount of fines inflicted by the magistrates in these cases shows a proportionate increase, contrasting favourable with that of the last year, the result being Rs. 743 for the four months and Rs. 1,034 for the last whole year. The Government of India having sanctioned, at the recommendation of the local Government, the grant to the Society of half of the fines obtained by its prosecutions, the Society has obtained a prospective interest in each conviction which, while stimulating the exertion of its agents and secretaries, will provide a much needed addition to its income. Encouraged by the liberal assistance afforded by the Government grant the meeting resolved to deposit a portion of the Society's fund at interest, by placing at one of the banks the sum of Rs. 1,500, in the name of the President and one of the secretaries. It was also resolved unanimously to thank Government for the liberal support which the share of the fines will afford. The honorary secretary showed the meeting a specimen of net-bag for the proper conveyance of fowls from the market. The cruel practice of conveying fowls slung by the legs, head downwards, has been one of the subjects to which the Society has devoted some attention. Mr. Kaikhosro placed before the meeting large placards in the English, Gujeratee and Marathee languages issued by the order of the executive committee, and which are stuck up on the walls of the different markets and other public places, cautioning servants, fowl dealers and others against the evil practice, and reminding them of the fines inflicted by Mr. Nana Morojee on two poulterers who were prosecuted by the Society for the offence. These basket nets have been successfully introduced in Calcutta by the Animal Protection Society in that city, and it was resolved in the meeting on Wednesday to arrange with some basket makers for their manufacture and sale in Bombay. The general meeting having gone through its usual business passed a vote of thanks to Mr. Allan F. Turner, one of their honorary secretaries, for the zeal and ability with which he had conducted the duties of his post, which at the last quarterly meeting he had asked leave to resign because of pressure of professional work.

Mr. Vanderstraatan, the newly appointed Deputy Sheriff of Bombay, having with the consent of the Chief Justice accepted the post, he was appointed one of the honorary secretaries in the room of Mr.
Turner. It was also resolved to ask his Lordship the Bishop of Bombay to consent to become a patron to the Society, so that with their Excellencies, the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief, the Society may reckon the support of the heads of the civil, the military and ecclesiastical administrations in this Presidency.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 4.

DEATH OF AN INDIAN STUDENT .- An inquest was held on Aug. 26, at Powis-square, Kensington, concerning the death of James Stainas Harke, aged seventeen, an Indian student at Mr. Wren's Stains Harke, aged seventeen, an Indian student at Mr. Wren's College, Powis-square. Deceased had been studying for the Indian Civil Service, and on Aug. 24 he was in No. 9 room, at the top of the house, amusing himself by stepping out of the window on to the ledge outside, which was only a foot wide. While there he threw his slipper at a companion, who threw it back and then left the room. He had hardly got downstairs when he heard that deceased had fallen into the garden—a distance of fifty feet—and was dead. The young man had been in the habit of going from one room to another by means of the ledge, although repeatedly warned of the risk he ran. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders have been received at the Bank of England for India Council drafts to the amount of £350,000 (35 lacs of land for India Council drafts to the amount of £350,000 (35 lacs of rupees). There appeared to be some doubt whether the result would be made known on Wednesday or Thursday, owing to the wording of last week's advertisement, but at the usual time the allotment was announced. The amounts disposed of were—to Calcutta, £101,200; to Bombay, £100,000; and to Madras, £4.000; in all £205,200, leaving £144,800 to be added to the amount offered next week. Tenders on all Presidencies at 1s. 7\frac{3}{4}d. per rupee receive in full, and thus the abatement of \frac{1}{4}d. in the minimum since ceive in full, and thus the abatement of 1d. in the minimum since last week has not been sufficient.—The Silver Market was affected by the allotment of the India Bills, and bars which had been sold on Wednesday morning at 52d. per ounce only realised 515d. in the afternoon. The Secretary of State for India notifies that tenders for the Council drafts will be received on Wednesday next for £350,000 (35 lacs of rupees), no mention being made of the amount unallotted on Wednesday last, which was £144,800.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The troops for India in the approaching relief season will embark at Portsmouth for conveyance to Bombay in her Majesty's Indian troopships, which will leave for their destination at the undermentioned dates:—The 1st Battalion 12th Regiment on September 17, the 2nd Battalion 17th Regiment on October 1, the headquarters and A, B, and D Batteries of the B Brigade Royal Horse Artillery on October 15; the 4th Battalion 60th Rifles on October 29. The vessels with the above regiments will call at Queenstown five days later. The 12th Lancers and C and E Batteries of the B Brigade Royal Horse Artillery on December 29, the 2nd Battalion 11th Regiment on February 9, 1877. Vessels will also leave Portsmouth with draughts on January 12 and 26 and February 23, 1877. The vessels with the regiments for England will leave Bombay on November 7 and 21, December 5 and 19, February 13 and 27, 1877, March 13 and 27, and April 10. The ships for each voyage will be duly communicated to the several authorities concerned. On one of the homeward voyages a regiment will be disembarked at Aden, and another embarked for Portsmouth. The dates of arrival of the ships at Portsmouth will depend on the time actually required for the voyage, but they will be about December 10 and 24, January 7 and 21, 1877, March 18, April 1, 15, and 29, and May 13.

THE INDIAN ARMY.—On July 1, 1867, the Indian army in the Bengal Presidency possessed 354 lieutenant-colonels, 203 majors, 499 captains, and 245 subalterns, making a total of 1,301 European officers. The different ranks are distributed as follows:-The army staff, or departments connected with army administration, find employment for 25 lieut.-colonels, 6 majors, 17 captains, and 2 subalterns. The native regiments account for 86 lieut.-colonels, 61 majors, 215 captains, and 182 subalterns. On civil or political employ are 43 lieut.-colonels, 28 majors, 71 captains, and 14 subalterns. The police force absorbs 15 lieut.-colonels, 10 majors, and 15 captains. To the Public Works Department belong 10 lieut. colonels, 6 majors, 19 captains, and 5 subalterns. To miscellaneous employ not included under the foreign heads may be assigned 34 lieut.-colonels, 25 majors, 57 captains, and 16 subalterns. At the above date there were absent on furlough 81 lieut.-colonels, 53 majors, 90 captains, and 26 subalterns. Under the head of field officers on general duty and captains and subalterns attached to regiments in excess of the regular compliment are classed 31 lieut.-colonels, 14 majors, and 15 captains, while 29 lieut.-colonels are permitted to reside in Europe under the terms of para. 2 of G.G.O. No. 797 of August 1, 1872. If it be not libellous to say so, it might be remarked that the field officers under the last two headings may be models of domestic virtue, but are quite unfit to set a battalion in the field. This return, it may be added, does not include general officers or officers drawing colonel's allowances-in other words, off-reckon-With reference to the proportion of field officers to captains and subalterns on duty with native regiments, it may be stated that the officering of those corps contemplates three field officers, that the officering of those corps contempored that is, the commandant and two wing officers, the remaining four that is, the commandant and two wing officers, the remaining four that is, the commandant and two wing officers, the remaining four being captains or subalterns, the former being preferred. The subadars and jemadars correspond to the subaltern officers in Eurosubdars and jemadars correspond to the subaltern officers in European regiments. The normal state of the officers of the Indian army exhibits very nearly the proportion of three-sevenths field officers to four-sevenths captains and subalterns. The field officers are respectively officers of over twenty-six and twenty years' service, which cannot be thought too little for the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major. Possibly it might be better if subalterns are world ten years' service, captains girlleton and major treats for only ten years' service, captains eighteen, and majors twenty-five, instead of twelve, twenty, and twenty-six, as at present; but, after all, that is a mere matter of opinion.—Times of India.

Summary and Revielv.

Our latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, August 18; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, August 16; Calcutta, August 15.

It is understood in India that the Secretary of State is going to recommend the Viceroy to appoint a Special Commission on the Berar Question, consisting of three military or civil officers named by the Supreme Government, three legal members of the High Court of Calcutta, and three Europeans or natives for the Nizam. It is further stated that the Commission will assemble at Haidarabad next cold season, and will report direct to the Viceroy. This move, if properly carried out, should clear up matters which controversy has lately darkened. About two years ago the Government of Lord Northbrook, with good reason, refused even to discuss the question of the Nizam's claim to the Berars, and returned unread the letters of Sir Salar Jung upon the subject. But the recent agitation fed by Sir Salar Jung's visit to England may be held to justify a change of front which two years ago did not seem necessary. Further reticence might be taken to mean consciousness of wrongdoing on our part, and the true facts of the case are very little known now even to Anglo-Indians. A fair and full inquiry would at least remove all cause for injurious suspicions, and in all likelihood justify the course pursued by successive Governors General, notably Lord Dalhousie, towards the Nizam.

A SOMEWHAT perilous experiment has just been started in the Indian Civil Service. In affirming the substantial truth of certain newspaper announcements touching the intention of the Indian Government to employ natives in several of the situations hitherto held exclusively by European Covenanted Civil servants, the Pioneer goes on to explain that "the idea of thus employing natives emanated from the India House, not from the Supreme Government. It was caused by a formal complaint made by nearly all the natives who had been admitted into the Indian Civil Service, that they did not get their fair share either of promotion or of responsible appointments in India; and that they were invariably placed as subordinate to Europeans, and never, in any instance, put over them. The order has gone forth from the Secretary of State to the different Indian presidencies, directing that for the future native Covenanted Civil servants are to have exactly the same appointments given them as if they were Europeans, and that if their position demands it, they are to have European assistants under them, just the same as if they were themselves Englishmen. In fact, no difference whatever is to be made between them and their European colleagues." Against the abstract justice of such a measure we have not a word to say, but we are curious to see how it will work in the interests of British rule. Possibly the English subordinate will keep his native superior straight; but how if the latter should wax insolent or prove otherwise unfit for his new power? If the Pioneer may be trusted, however, the new order will be carried out. We are told that "a large majority of the India Council was against its being issued, but the Marquis of Salisbury was determined to carry his point, and has issued a minute or letter to the Viceroy on the subject, in which it is stated in so many words, that any European civil servant who declines to serve under a native superior merely because the latter is a native, must at once be shelved, and reported to the Home Government as guilty of disobedience of orders.'

WE regret to note the continued prevalence of cholera in various places. A fatal case of cholera is reported from Sikandsrabad, where a soldier of the 2-16 Regiment was taken ill on the 9th August, and died the following day. Cholera has broken out among the Artillery at Allahabad. They have been moved from barracks and are encamped at Naini. Among the more prominent victims to the scourge was Captain Fisher, of the 4th Hussars, Assistant Quartermaster-General, Rawal Pindi Division, who died at Marri on the 8th August. Up to the 11th of August, out of twenty-six cases of cholera among the European troops at Marri, twenty-four had ended in death. Since then, however, the disease had apparently left that station, only to re-appear amongst the European soldiers at Gharial camp, five miles from Marri, on the Kashmir-road. Two men died there on the 12th, out of six attacked.

An event which rumour foreshadowed some months ago has at length been announced as fact in the Indian papers, which tell us that Major-General Sir Edwin Johnson, K.C.B., has been offered, and has accepted, the succession to Major-General Sir Henry Norman as Military Member of the Council in India. Sir Henry, we suppose, will take his brother-general's place in the Indian Council.

We hear that a good service pension has been conferred on Deputy Surgeon-General David Wyllie in the room of Lieutenant-General Younghusband, who has succeeded to Colonel's Allowance.

BISHOF GELLOF Madras, as Acting Metropolitan, has expressed his strong disapproval of the measures lately taken by Bishop Coplestone against the Church Missionaries of Ceylon, and has directed the return, for the present, of the suspended licenses. He himself was about to visit Ceylon to inquire into the matter at the invitation of influential members of the church and laity. Bishop Coplestone has returned only ten licenses, and insists upon suspending two missionaries.

THE Maharajah of Vizianagram is very ill again, two doctors attending him, who advise the abandonment of his proposed trip to Benares.

Digitized by

On the 10th August one of the piers of the Satlej Bridge at Phillor fell, carrying two spans of the bridge with it and stopping the traffic.

The Pioneer points out a curious phenomenon observable this year in connection with the opium crop. The harvest has been so abundant, the drug has been stored up in such quantities, that beyond the amount required for the sales of this year there will be a reserve stock of thirty-five thousand chests in hand. This, of course, is a gratifying circumstance, as showing that the Government is possessed of so much more property than it would have had otherwise. Government is always anxious to steady the opium revenue, by rendering its receipts under this head independent of short crops and bad years. For this end nothing could be better than a large reserve. "But there is a scaring side to the prettiest picture. The thirty-five thousand chests which are passed to the reserve fund have to be paid for to the cultivator. Hard up as the Government is, it finds itself under the necessity of spending a considerable sum, now of all periods in the world's history, to improve its position in the future at the expense of the present. The outturn of the opium revenue this year, therefore, will be about half-a-million sterling less than it would have been if the crop had not been so unusually abundant."

FROM the returns just issued for the year 1875 we learn that in the city of Bombay 81 vagrants were apprehended by the police and 15 voluntarily sought their protection. Out of this number 93 went to the workhouse—in other words, the House of Correction; two only being admitted into the more hospitable precincts of the Strangers' Home, while one went to the Sailors' Home. Besides these men 15 others were apprehended in the mofussil districts, but only 9 found their way to the workhouse, the remainder getting some employment. Of the grand total of 102 for the entire year, 76 were Europeans, 23 Eurasians, and 3 Americans. The Railway Companies contributed 25 to the number of vagrants; 23 were sailors and the remainder seem to have been waifs and strays of various pursuits, but the origin of whose fallen position has not been traced. The Bombay Government remark that the conduct of the vagrants was not so good as their health, for 29 of them were punished, chiefly for drunk ennness, a condition they became involved in when allowed to leave the workhouse in search of employment. During the year all the vagrants were disposed of either by obtaining employment, or going to their friends. Nine were sent to the European General Hospital; whilst 20 of them went away without leave, and 22 were left in the workhouse, a number which seems to be normal, for 24 were in the work-house at the beginning of the year. From these returns we gather that there are always about 24 men in the workhouse, and that the numbers above that total come and go during the year, only one man having remained as long as 394 days in the workhouse. The cost of the workhouse last year was Rs. 5,421, an excess of Rs. 304 over the year before. The total cost to Goverdment on account of vagrants throughout the Presidency was Rs. 8,214-5-9; not a very heavy charge on the funds of the Presidency.

A FRIEND, whose sources of information are thoroughly trustworthy, has sent us the following story, the truth of which we have no reason to doubt:—

"I regret much to learn that great discredit has been thrown on the Government of a North-Western Province by the misconduct of a well-known secretary, who has invaded the sanctity of the private life of a married officer of the Royal Artillery. Endeavours are being made to keep the matter out of view, but the outraged husband has declared his intentions of seeking redress in the Divorce Court. Lord Melbourne's position as First Minister of the Crown once depended on an issue of the same character. It is to be hoped the head of the Government in question may have sufficient decision to dispense with the services of a man whom the world will call a 'gay Lothario.' If not he will simply be holding out a premium to others to go and do likewise."

We are glad to learn from the Pioneer that the financial resolution lately issued by the Indian Government concerning economy in public works does not apply to the expenditure of the current year. Former resolutions, it says, recognising the necessity of leaving this expenditure intact, remain in force. It would have been well if the resolution of July 31 had been more explicit in this particular. Economy is a good thing at all times, especially when the financial horizon is overcast; but there are cases in which the seeming economy may involve a good deal of ultimate waste. The raison d'être of a Public Works Department would be taken away if it had no public works to carry on; and it is cheaper in the long run to continue works already begun than to stop them for the sake of a small present saving before they are finished. In such cases a temporary stoppage may add largely to the ultimate expense, besides delaying the moment when such works would begin to pay; and meanwhile the State may be paying heavily for the services of officers who have no work to do.

A "Poor Sepoy" of the 28th Madras N.I., now at Mercara, in a letter to the Bangalor Spectator, complains bitterly of the inconvenience to which the men of his corps are put by being located in a station where the heavy rains are so seriously felt. It appears that sepoys are too poor to supply themselves and their families with what is needful to protect themselves against severe weather. The regiment seems to have suffered great inconvenience of late years. When at Vellore, in 1872, the floods destroyed their lines, and when the sepoys had rebuilt them, after a great deal of delay, the regiment was ordered to the Camp of Exercise, en route to Mercara. At this station rain falls in copious showers during six months of the year, and the sepoy has not the wherewithal to supply himself with provisions which other people store ap for the monsoons. Then, again, the men are subject to great loss by being frequently transferred from one station to another. They ask to be sent to some station like Madras, Haidarabad, or Trichinopoly, for some time at least, where they may live in comfort. It cannot be said that their demands are unreasonable.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pioneer, writing from Kashmir, gives an alluring account of prices in the Happy Valley:—

A midshipman's pay is said to be nothing a day and find himself, but no one can venture to assert that Middy, with his income thus limited, could subsist in Kashmir; but this I would say, that I know of no place in India, or out of it, where the married captain or subaltern suffering from the effects of climate and the res angusta domi, could more effectually restore health and purse than in this so-called Valley of Roses, that is, if satisfied to live on the good plain food the country affords. I will quote the nerrick of some things for the benefit of those of your readers who may not have been here. Mutton was at one time much cheaper than it is now, the days of 8 anna sheep have gone by. At Srinagar good meat, that is, meat as good as grain-fed mutton in the plains, is six seers for the rupee, but when travelling in the district a sheep can be always bought for one, two, three or four rupees, according to size. Bread, and it is very good bread, costs one anna the pound loaf; rice, best quality, 16 seers the rupee, but I should have promised that the Kashmir seer is only libs against the Hindustani seer of 2lbs. Roasting fowls 3 and 4 annas each, but chickens, fit for currie and mulligatawny, are to be had for 1½ to 2½ annas. Ducks 6 and 8 annas a pair, and I have seen a fat green goose purchased for 8 annas, but the usual price is 12 annas. Eggs 1 anna per dozen. The bazaar butter is better than any butter I have got from the bazaar in the plains, and if your kkansdama is worth his salt, he can keep you supplied with this article as good as if made in England. Fruit is to be had for the plucking. The land is overflowing with milk and honey. I am told, however, that living is not so cheap in Kashmir as it used to be, and I can believe it, for John Bull has been poking his nose into it for nearly thirty years, and wherever he goes he raises the price of everything. I think it is a pity there should be any restriction to the number of visitors allowed to come here, and I cannot quite understand to whose advant

IF Mr. E. Schrottky has good authority for the startling statements put forward by him in his "Principles of Rational Agriculture Applied to India and its Staple Products," the material progress of our Indian Empire should be a subject rather of grave forebodings than of reasonable hopes. "The same Indian soil"—he tells us—"which afforded its children from time immemorial abundance of what was known to be the essentials of life, denies them the blessing at the present hour." The country in fact is growing less and less capable of feeding its vast and growing population. The Indian rayat ploughs, sows, and reaps in the same manner now as his forefathers did before him; but "with this difference, that the soil has become exhausted, and the products raised therefrom, so far from showing, such improvements as we not tice in other countries, have become reduced in quantity and deteriorated in quality, and consequently both man and beast have degenerated." What this means he shows by comparing the produce of land in the time of Akbar with the produce of the present day. According to Akbar's tables, which are said to have been carefully prepared, the average produce of an acre of rice in the middle of the seventeenth century was 1,338 lbs., of wheat 1,155 lbs., of cotton unpicked 670 lbs., equal to 223 lbs. of picked cotton. The statistics of the present decade, on the other hand, give as the average yield per acre, of rice 800 lbs. to 900 lbs., of wheat 660 lbs., of picked cotton 52 lbs. It appears that, as compared with these last figures, in Lombardy the yield of rice averages 2,500 lbs. per acre, that wheat in Europe gives 1,500 lbs., and that clean cotton yields 300 lbs. per acre in America, and 400 lbs. in Egypt. If all this be true, have we not reason—in Mr. Schrottky's words—"to stand aghast at the fact thus revealed, that the soil of India is rapidly approaching exhaustion? For thousands of years the soil of India has nourished millions of souls: but during all that time it has, with every recurring year, been deprived of a large portion of its food-giving ele-What with the growing barrenness of the soil and the rapid growth of the population Indian statesmen have rather a knotty problem to solve, if they can, at no distant

A Bombay telegram of September 6 states that the Bombay and Baroda Railway Bridge over the Narbada has been carried away by the highest flood known on that river for many years past.

THE Army List for the Madras Presidency shows us that on the first day of this year there were in the Staff Corps 230 lieutenant colonels, 239 majors, 168 captains, and only 41 subalterns. As there are four regiments of cavalry and forty of infantry in the Madras Army, while only 30 subalterns are regimentally employed, one third of whom are on furlough or sick leave, we get just 20 lieutenants for 44 regiments; that is, not half a subaltern for each. At the same time Madras can spare lieutenants for civil employ in Burmah, for the Punjab Frontier Force, and the Nizam's contingent. scarcity of subalterns relieved by fresh recruits. In 1875 there was not a single admission to the Madras Staff Corps, and only three youngsters became probationers for the same. In the same year 23 majors became lieutenant colonels, 35 captains became majors, and 5 lieutenants became captains. Comment on this would be quite superfluous. It is curious also to find the average length of service of commandants in the Madras Army is just 35 years, so that each commanding officer must be fully fifty-three years old, while some of them are probably much older. The length of service of the seconds-in-command, too, is rather surprising. It appears that 27 regiments out of 44 have full colonels as seconds-in-command, which means that these 27 gentlemen have done over thirty-one years' service without succeeding to a command. Again, out of the 44 regiments, 38 wing and squadron officers are lieutenant-colonels, one is a full colonel, and only five are majors, although the inventors of that wonderful Staff Corps intended captains for wing officers, and majors for seconds-in-command. By the end of this year, moreover, 22 majors will have become lieutenantcolonels, and nearly 40 captains, majors. To relieve this rush of blood to the head a few officers will take their colonel's allowances, and about 30 more may retire under the new scheme.

A REFORM, long needed and for some time seriously mooted in the Indian Council, has at length, we understand, been definitely adopted by the home authorities. The difficulty and impolicy of officering the Native regiments under the present system of transfers from the British Army to the Indian Staff Corps have compelled the War-office to accept the scheme put forth by the India-office, for replenishing the subaltern ranks of the Indian Army by means of direct appointments from this This virtual return to the system of former days has not of course been carried without a hard struggle between the two departments specially concerned. Had any other mode of repairing the utter collapse of the present system been open to the War-office, it would certainly have been tried in preference to the plan now decreed. But the attempt to officer native regiments through the Line has proved so conspicuous a failure that nothing remained but a recurrence to the system of which Addiscombe was long the brilliant example. forth cadets for Indian service will join the several Staff Corps that are still to feed the native regiments, without having to pass through the Line. Instead of the present roundabout process, they will only be required to pass certain tests of fitness. at Sandhurst, and after arrival in India eighteen months will be allowed them in order to undergo a final examination in the native languages. Out of twenty-five cadets who lately volunteered at Sandhurst for the Indian Staff Corps, two only have failed in the preliminary examination. The remainder, we believe, are to start for India as soon as the requisite details have been agreed upon by the War and India Offices.

THE Army and Navy Gazette notices that no officer becomes entitled to his Colonel's allowances until December next, when Major-Generals A. Fytch, Bengal S.C., and Sir A. T. Wilde, K.C.S.I., Madras S.C., and Colonels G. C. Hatch, Bengal S.C., and W. Crewe, Madras S.C., take their off-reckonings.

Major-General W. His first commission dated from 1842; he became a major in 1862, a colonel in 1873, and major-general in 1875.

Another old Indian officer, Major-General H. W. Trevelyars, C.B., colonel commandant of the Royal (Bombay) Artillery, died on Thursday, August 31. After completing his studies at Addiscombe, he joined the Bombay Artillery in December. 1820, and was promoted to lieutenant in the same month and year. He served under Outram in the Persian campaign of 1856-57 in command of the artillery, and was present at the assault and capture of Reshir and surrender of Bushir, at Burazjun, and the battle of Khushab, and afterwards commanded the rear guard on the march back to Bushir. His name was honourably mentioned three times in the despatches, and in 1858 his services were rewarded by a Companionship of the Bath. He was promoted to the rank of captain in 1838, major in 1851, lieut. colonel in 1857, colonel in 1861, and became major-general in 1867; and in July, 1874, he was appointed colonel-commandant of the Royal (Bombay) Artillery.

FURTHER REMARKS ON THE FULLER CASE

In our remarks on Lord Lytton's treatment of the now famous Fuller case, we overlooked one point which might seem to tell in favour of his lordship's view of Mr. Fuller's legal criminality. According to the "explanation" appended to Section 299 of the Penal Code, "A person who causes bodily injury to another who is labouring under a disorder, disease, or bodily infirmity, and thereby accelerates the death of that other, shall be deemed to have caused his death." This certainly seems to agree with the familiar ruling of our English law, that any one who commits an act in itself illegal is held responsible for the consequences of that act, however unintentional and unexpected they may be. It might, therefore, seem that Mr. Fuller should have been tried for homicide under the section above named. But that section merely ordains that, "Whoever causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing death, or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death, commits the offence of culpable homicide." How is the "explanation" first quoted to be made to fit in with this clear definition of "culpable homicide?" It appears from the evidence that Mr. Fuller neither intended to cause death, nor to do such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, nor was he aware that a slap in the face with his open hand was likely to bring on rupture of the spleen. Section 299, in fact, says one thing, and the "explanation" another. Which was Mr. Leeds to follow? But it was not even clearly shown that the blow dealt by Mr. Fuller directly caused or hastened his syce's death. In his letter to the Delhi Gazette, that gentleman declares that his slapping of the man's face only made him more insolent, "when, with a view to abate the nuisance, I clutched at the blanket on his head, but found I had seized his hair. I gave this a slight twitch, and the man either fell or sat on the ground. Immediately he fell, he got up, and bolted away at a sharp pace into the compound opposite my house. I jumped into my trap and drove to church. While passing the compound of the house into which the man had run, my family saw him seated behind an out-house, yelling out lustily that he had been struck, and would go to the Magistrate's Court." At the inquiry made on the spot by the police it came out that the syce, after escaping from his master's compound, had met with a fall in the next. From this it would certainly seem as if death had been brought about by the second fall rather than the first. If so, the magistrate was justified in giving Mr. Fuller the benefit of the doubt, and this view of the matter was apparently upheld by the High Court Judges, who found the sentence passed upon Mr. Fuller "not particularly open to objection." It appears, too, that the provocation offered went far to excuse the blow dealt. Be that as it may, however, we think that a Viceroy young in office, and utterly ignorant of Indian ways and habits, should have held his hand before dealing a heavy blow at the administration of public justice in India by his own countrymen. If the impulse was generous, the act, at any rate, was unwise, as tending to encourage those very feelings which a statesmanlike ruler would do his best to allay. How the native press has taken up the matter may be seen from the following passage in Native Opinion:—

We are extremely pained to observe that there is no break in the long series of outrages committed by strong Europeans against weak and help-less natives. The most recent case is that of Mr. Fuller, an English pleader at Agra, and not a common soldier like Magrath. This man, a limb of the law, and expected to know something about assaults, so buffieted and struck his syee, for a slight dereliction of duty in joining him, that the syce died almost immediately. Our readers will not at all have been surprised to see that the culprit was let off with a slight fine, as it is usually the case to ascribe murders of this kind to a rupture of the spleen, and when that will not do, to absolve the assassin on the simple plea of non compos mentis, as happened in the case of the surveyor who deliberately aimed at and shot several sowars, was lodged for form's sake in the Colaba Asylum, and then shipped to England at the cost of the Government, where he is now enjoying a pension for which he would otherwise have been obliged to work during a number of years.

Another native journal, the Hindu Patriot, vents its malice in the following strain:—

It is remarkable that whenever the death of a poor native has ensued from the blows of a European, the excuse has generally been that it is Providence and not the assailant who is responsible for the accident. It is diseased spleen and nothing else. But how rarely such a contretemps takes place when one native beats another or when a native has been let off on such a plea. It is strange that the deceased spleen should be discovered only when the native dies from the effects of blows from a European. This is a physiological fact which our obtuse understanding cannot comprehend. Perhaps Nature lays down one law when a native is the victim of an outrage from a brother native, and another law when he is the victim of an outrage from his European and Christian brother, just as some of our magistrates lay down one law for the trial of the native and another law for that of the European offender.

This paper, be it remembered, is edited by a native member of the Bengal Legislative Council, a man who may be said to owe everything to the Government he serves. The reference in the other journal to poor Mr. Hall, Revenue Superintendent in Gujarat, who, in a sudden fit of madness, shot three natives, is a curious, if characteristic, sample of ingenious malignity, in keeping with the description of Mr. Fuller as an "assassin." The Hindu Prakash of Bombay has also avenged itself on Englishmen in general by its unstinted abuse of Mr. Fuller. Another paper, the Amrita Bazar Patrika, openly exults over the charges which Lord Lytton has brought against his countrymen; and the Indian Mirror, which appears to be the mouthpiece of Babu Keshab Chandar Sen, tells how Mr. Fuller struck his syce "so violently as to cause his death." Several papers freely hint that the medical evidence in cases like Mr. Fuller's is generally perjured. There is nothing very new perhaps in these displays of race-hatred on the part of native journalists; but it is greatly to be regretted that a Governor-General should have done aught to fan the flame which the most beneficent efforts of foreign rulers can never entirely quench.

PRECEDENCE OF INDIAN CHIEFS AMONG THEMSELVES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—You published, some time since, a very interesting list of the Princes and Chiefs of India, showing, approximately, the position each is supposed to hold in reference to his neighbours; but I cannot help thinking that the list is susceptible of considerable amendment, and I would point out at least one instance, in which the Maharaja of Kashmir is placed seventh on the list, whereas I have every reason to believe that he holds, in the opinion of the Indian authorities themselves, the second place, more with reference to the important position of his principality on our north-western frontier, than to any claim for such he might otherwise have on the consideration of the British Government in India; and yet that is by no means inconsiderable, even on the showing of your own table, and I trust that his Highness will not hesitate to avail himself of the opportunity that will soon be afforded of Lord Lytton's visit to Jamu and to Kashmir to advance his claim to a more prominent position, let who will come after him. He was specially distinguished by the visit of the Prince of Wales, who made Jamu the ultima thule of his journeyings in India, to do honour to his Highness, and he has not presumed, as some of them now above him in your list have ventured to do on the strength of a similar honour done them. One instance is reported to have been so specially offensive that, although given on excellent authority, I can hardly credit it.

Be that as it may, it is certainly most desirable, especially in view of the forthcoming pageant at Dehli, that an authoritative end should, once for all, be put to the uncertainty that now prevails on this, to a native, whatever be his rank, all-important question. Writing of Dehli and its pageant-to-be, can you reconcile what we are told of its forthcoming uneclipsed splendour and costliness, with the trenchant orders for economy in every department of the State recently issued by the Governor-General? Is consistency only to be observed when it suits certain views and wishes? I hope a careful account of the cost will be kept, and placed before Parliament in due course, so that the people of England may know why their fellow-subjects in India, now suffering, not from a famine, but from a plethora of the current metal of the land, are to be burdened with the cost of the gilding of a crown that would have befitted the Queen a great deal better on its ancient and honoured footing than on its new-fangled pedestal.—Yours truly, London, Sept. 8, 1876.

THE INDIAN PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,-There have been loud complaints during the last few months from members of the Public Works Department of India, about their prospects of promotion. These complaints have found vent in letters to the various Indian papers, and to one or two of the English professional journals. Before analysing the grounds of these we will give a short sketch of the rise of this Department. The old Indian Public Works Department was established for the purpose of building barracks and other buildings necessary for the military occupation of the country and its civil administration, making roads, &c., &c., as well as keeping them in repair. Its members were recruited from the Indian engineers, artillery, and Staff officers, who, by interest, could obtain appointments, and by English engineers who went out on the chance of obtaining a berth. Later on a college for training engineers, was established at Roorkee, by the then Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces, Mr. Thomason; this institution exists to this day under the name of the Thomason Civil Engineering College and appealing provides a number of fairly trained engineering College and appealing provides a number of fairly trained engineering. ing College, and annually provides a number of fairly trained engineers who, if they be civilians, enter the Department as apprentices on Rs. 100 per mensem, or, if they be military men, as assistant engineers, second grade, on Rs. 350; but of this more anon. About the year 1858 it was found that the supply of men from the above sources was not equal to the demand. A competitive examination was therefore instituted at the India-office in England; candidates were obliged to conform to certain conditions, and to present a certificate of having studied under an engineer for at least two years. They underwent an examination lasting about six days, and were then sent to India. Those who first went out had to attend at Roorkee, where they were taught the ver-nacular and also Indian methods of work, accounts, &c. Only a few batches were sent to this college, and then the practice was dis-This system has obtained, until the year 1872, when continued. Cooper's Hill College was opened, the engineers sent out being under somewhat different regulations as regards pay to those of the Stanley Engineers, as those are called who came out under the competitive

The complaints made by the Stanley Engineers are, that—1. Though the advantages held out are the possibilities of rising to a salary of £3,000, these are for a very large percentage simply impossible. 2. That though they were told that they would obtain the grade of Executive Engineer, Fourth Grade, in usually aix years, by far the larger number do not obtain it until nearer eight years than seven. 3. That, owing to the introduction of so-called five years' Covenanted Engineers in 1868-69, their prospects of promotion have been lessened as these men were brought in in the higher grade of Executive Engineer, after only being appointed Assistant Engineers, First Grade. 4. That by reason of the non-promulgation of certain bonus schemes which have been under consideration for some years, a large number of Royal Engineers who would retire, were they granted, still continue to stop the flow of promotion; and 5th, that by the illiberality of the Uncovenanted Pension Rules, men who would go after twenty to twenty-five years' service still remain, as they find it impossible to do so until thirty or thirty-five years'

Now, with regard to the first of these, namely—the impossibility to obtain the maximum held out of £3,000 a year. A correspondent of the Pioneer, signing himself "A Stanley Engineer," gives a list of the present grades of Stanley Engineers, prepared from the official classified list corrected up to April, 1876, which is here transcribed. A list of the engineers who came out under a five years' covenant is also given for comparison:—

From this it will be seen that out of all those in the Department numbering now some 144, only one is a chief engineer, on Rs. 1,800 per mensem, or £2,160 per annum, taking the rupee at its fictitious value of two shillings. One chief engineer on Rs. 2,000 per mensem retired during the past six months, and it is believed that these are the only two who have ever obtained the grade of chief engineer. It will also be seen from the next list, that out of about sixty-eight appointments (excluding Madras and Bombay) forty still remain of the so-called five years' covenant men. On their first introduction it was pointed out to Government that their appointment in the higher grades would rain the prospects of those who began at the lower rung of the ladder, and had to work their way up. Government admitted the justice, and promised that their introduction should not affect their juniors in grade, and that they should be supernumerary; they have, however, all been absorbed, and consequently do affect the promotion. The Government stands charged, therefore, with a direct violation of promise.

There are altogether Chief Engineers, first grade, on Rs. 2,500 per mensem, six, out of which number one is temporary rank only. These are all Royal (late Bengal) Engineers. It is of course to the Bengal presidency alone these remarks apply; but the same can be said of both the other Presidencies of Madras and Bombay. Of Chief Enboth the other Presidencies of Madras and Bombay. Of Chief Engineers, second grade, on Rs. 2,000, there are four (including the above temporary one) and three temporary; these, too, are all Royal Engineers. Amongst the six permanent and four temporary Chief Engineers, third grade, there are two civilians, only one being a Stanley Engineer above referred to, and the other a five years' Engineer, his rank, however, being temporary only; it is therefore a mere fiction of the Government to say that promotion goes as high as £3,000 a year, because practically it does not, or any thing like it.

The next grievance is that—"though they were told that they would obtain the grade of Executive Engineer, fourth grade, in six years, they have to serve nearly eight. When Engineers first began to put forward their grievances the Pioneer endeavoured to show that things were not so bad as stated; however, it has been distinctly shown that the average service is seven and a-half years, taking the shown that the average service is seven and a-half years, taking the three Provinces together, and that this average is slowly increasing. Two letters of different dates in the Pioneer, one signed "M.C.," the other by "C.E.," show, the one that out of his batch of ten Engineers who arrived in March, 1868, seven are now, after eight and a-half years' service, still assistants, and the other that the average of the Punjab Provincial Branch was for first grade assistants seven years seven months on 1st January last, and would be now nearly eight years, and that most of these had not the remotest chance of promotion for some time to come. Out of seven assistants five are over eight years' service on 1st April, 1876. Of course this does not look hopeful, and it is no wonder that there should be a good deal of grumbling, as this is not a result of a failure in the officers them-

Number three grievance is—that owing to the introduction of five Number three grievance is—that owing to the introduction of five years' covenant men, their prospects of promotion have been lessened. Now, it is pretty generally understood that a promise was made that these men should not interfere in the promotion, as before stated; that they should be supernumerary. This has not been done. In the Punjab Irrigation Branch, seven engineers were appointed, who remain still under their five years' covenant. Now it cannot be maintained that the irrigation was a branch in which specially appointed men were necessary. It is a branch very little cultivated amongst engineers in England, as there is really no necessity for them to do so, there being few large irrigation works in this country.

For the railways, on the other hand, special knowledge is required.

For the railways, on the other hand, special knowledge is required, which engineers who came out as youths cannot have maintained, so as to keep pace with those of Europe; hence, it is agreed that these men should have been drafted into the Railway Branch, as certainly nine-tenths of them had had experience in very little else, and when there, they could have been kept on a separate roster which would have in no way interfered with those who were unfortunately in lower grades at the time they came out.

The fourth grievance is, that by the non-promulgation of certain Bonus Schemes, Royal Engineers on the Indian list are debarred from leaving the service. . . For some years past a scheme has been under discussion for relieving stagnation, by giving a Bonus varying with length of service to the older engineers at present; there are certain appointments called Colonels Commandant, which give the holders a yearly pay of about £1,000 per annum. As these are only obtainable by the death of one of the present holders, it follows that officers hold on as long as they can to obtain them were they available, as in the Staff Corps, after a term of years (thirty-eight), there would be a fair flow; but as this is not the case the scheme provided that a sum down should be given in lieu of these deferred chances, and it is this which prevents so many from going. Nothing having been settled one way or the other, those who are highest on the list of general officers hold on, and those below won't take the pension due to them, because a few months may possibly see it largely increased. It is believed that were these Bonus rules sanctioned, at least twenty officers of the Indian Engineers would go at once.

The fifth grievance, and possibly the one which, if rectified, would give greater satisfaction than any of the others is.—That by the illiberality men cannot go until they are cartificated as "unfit for further sarvice." The Bianchi is a sarvice of the control of the co beranty men cannot go until they are cartificated as which the further service." The Pioneer, in an article devoted to the Uncovenanted Service Pension Code, characterises it as a disgrace, and states that what it with one hand gives it takes away with the other, in fact, this is just what it does do. The minimum service recognized that the state of the control nised by Government, as service for pension, is fifteen years; but with their usual circumlocution it is stated that one month's salary will be given in the shape of a bonus for every year's service, but in no case can it exceed one year's pay. A, therefore, who retires at the end of fifteen years' continuous service, gets only the same as B, who also retires then, but who has had three years' furlough during the time. A better idea of the state of the Pension Code cannot be given then have recognized by the same as a service. than by copying the Pioneer's article on the subject under date of June, 1876; it is as follows:—

Officers in the various branches of the Uncovenanted Service of the Government of India who fail to understand their rights in reference to pensions have this excuse, that the Civil Pension Code is one of the most intricate and obscurely-worded set of rules we have ever tried to unravel.

Looking it up in order to ascertain exactly what the engineers of the Public Works Department can claim at present, we have found ourselves Public Works Department can claim at present, we have found ourselves involved in the study of something like a new branch of law. That the pensions now offered by Government are not worth taking, and that the conditions hedging them round are calculated to render mean concessors as disagreeable to the recipients as possible, was the general impression with which we started; but the conclusions we arrive at after a close exmination of the subject is, that the whole code is even less worthy than we imagined of a great Government. The actual pensions attainable are just such as may enable the Government to deny that it leaves its wornout officers to the mercy of the workhouse. Like Sally Brass administering food to the Marchioness, the Government seems to say to its officers—"Don't dare to say that we have leftyou to starve." Passing for the moment over eleven chapters of complicated regulations, defining qualifying service, Don't dare to say that we have left you to starve." Passing for the moment over eleven chapters of complicated regulations, defining qualifying service, conditions under which service is or is not counted, and so forth, we come to the twelfth, which deals with the "amount of pension or gratuity." This sets out with a provise which is worse than mean—absolutely unfair. It runs thus:—"A pension or a gratuity (except a pension granted under section 62) is fixed in rupees and not in sterling, even though it is to be paid in England." This rule, under the present conditions of exchange, has the effect of diminishing the pensions which the code pretends to give by nearly a quarter. We should add that section 62 relates merely to barrister-judges and the legislative sccretary. Let us see now what is the by nearly a quarter. We should add that section 62 relates merely to barrister-judges and the legislative sccretary. Let us see now what is the scale on which the pensions, thus curtailed, are calculated. The minimum service which the Government recognises at all appears to be one of fiteen years, broken periods of a year not being taken intracount, so that a service of fourteen years and three-quarters would not carry any claim at all. The gratuity payable to an officer completing fifteen years' service is an amount equal to one month's amount for the completed year. an amount equal to one month's emoluments for each completed year, though it is not under any circumstances to exceed twelve months' emoluments in all. This last proviso, it will be observed, nullifies the previous sentence. As an officer cannot claim at all unless he has completed fifteen years, he cannot under any circumstances get even the pitiful gift of one month's emoluments for each year. The pretended gift of certain advantages with one hand and their withdrawal by the other is, however, a feature of the Civil Pension Code which runs through most of its sec-If the invalid officer's service amounts to twenty-five years, he may get a pension amounting to one-third of his salary. So much at any rate the Government offers with its right hand, and then it takes away a portion of the gift with its left. The pension so granted is not to exceed Rs. 3,000 a year; if the officer's average emoluments do not exceed Rs. 12,000 a year, the limit is Rs. 2,000. In other words, if the officer, after twenty-five years' service, is drawing a thousand a month, he is not to receive a third of his pay as pension, as the code untruly alleges, but only a sixth. For service longer than twenty-five years, in the case still of invalid officers, the mendacious half of the next section says they are to get half their average emoluments, and the qualifying clause again cuts down the amount; which is never to be more than Rs. 5,000 a year, nor in down the amount; which is never to be more than Rs. 5,000 a year, nor in case of the emoluments finally received not exceeding Rs. 12,000, more than Rs. 4,000 a year. Instead of a half in such cases, that is, the amount given is a third. In reference to superannuation pensions granted in cases where the qualifying service begins after the officer has attained the age of twenty-five, the pretence is that the amounts given are the same as invalid pensions, but a further proviso curtails them again. The amount is to be "multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which is the number of years' service completed, no (exceeding thirty, and the denominator of which is thirty. The imit of Rs. 2,000, Rs. 3,000 Rs. 4,000, or Rs. 5,000 is to be applied before and not after this multiplication." We leave readers fond of figures to gauge the malevolent humour of this passage. The fond of figures to gauge the malevolent humour of this passage. notion of multiplying the pension by a fraction is thoroughly in keeping with the whole spirit of the code. We come now to Retiring Pensions. These are given after thirty years' service, "the same in amount as an invalid pension admissible after twenty-five years' service." We have shown above that this pension is described as being a third of the emoluments of which the retiring officer is in receipt, and is really curtailed in such a way that it may be as little as a sixth, and cannot be what it pretends, unway that it may be as little as a sixth, and cannot be what it pretends, unless the officer happens to be in receipt of just Rs. 15,000 a year in salary. Nor must it be supposed that under the liberal wording of the code an officer has a right to any pension at any time. Section 60 says:—"The full pension or gratuity admissible under the rules is not to be given as a matter of course, or unless the service rendered has been really approved." Probably this section is rarely taken advantage of by Government, but it is morthy of the code, and the code of it. We do not hesitate to describe the whole series of regulations, thus partially analysed, as profoundly discreditable to the Government of India. Not merely in their application to the D. P. W. service, which it has demorphised and empiritual plut in to the D.P.W. service, which it has demoralised and embittered, but in application to any branch of the uncovenanted service the code seems to as one which no one having the high character of the Indian Government at heart can read without a feeling of shame. It has actually come to pass that the treatment of its own officers by the Government of India is a blemish on its good name. How this deplorable code first grew up we need not stop to inquire. But the worst of the whole situation is that these rules are manifestly drawn up by authors trained in the habit of the financial department—by people who have grown cunning in resisting claims without taking cognisance of their alsolute merits; and although their motives may be entirely pure, they thus impress the action of Government with the stamp of a Jew money-lender's tactics. In doling out pensions to its servants, the Government is made to assume the attitude of the usurer, who has undertaken to give £160 for a bill for £250 at three months, and then forces his victim to accept bad sherry and worse pictures to the value of half the promised amount. In point of fact, the mean trick by which a third of the salary is promised and a lesser amount given under some rule about maxima held in reserve, is the usurer's trick jaire and simple, though the language of the shameless pension code seems of the surface to give it an air of legal propriety. It is the duty of Government, of all officers sufficiently near the Viceroy, to give their individual convictions weight, to make a study of this code, and to work resolutely for its reconstruction. The condition of the D.P.W.

When the most influential paper in the Bengal Presidency calls the code a "shamelers" one, those who serve under it cannot well be said to have a small grievance.

aviour towards employés is dishonourable even if it pays, and whether service alone is a sufficient justification for immediate action; but quite apart from any direct evils which the existence of the code has brought upon public interests, its reform should be undertaken because mean be-

Of course a reply could be made to the effect that these things are all printed, and can be ascertained before entering the service. Quite true; but most men do not know of all these codes and regulations, and confine their inquiries to the "general prospect." This Government takes very good care shall be the best side shown and when binding men to serve five or ten years, and to do this, that, or the other, takes very good care to bind themselves to nothing. Take the pamphlet given to the Stanley Engineers as an instance of holding out inducements which Government well know they can never perform. It knows as well as possible that it will not allow a civilian to be promoted to the highest grade of Chief Engineer, First Grade.

Again, what guarantee is there that Government will act up to its printed rules? Until about two years ago fusions have him who took furlough. But on the 10th of September, 1874, a resolution was gazetted in which the old régime was done away with, a scale was fixed, and, if the numbers were over this scale, as they almost invariably were, every three actual vacancies by retirement or death gave only two vacancies, the third lapsing, and furlough gave only a tem-

This was a violation of the rules under which the revious to that date entered the department. It is well known, too, that Government want to abrogate the Travelling Allowance Rules this they have hitherto not felt themselves strong enough to do but in one little matter they have done so. The old rules gave an allowance of three annas per mile by railway. A resolution of the Financial Department, however, ruled that when travelling by State Railway an officer could only draw double first-class fare, or, in other words, reduced the allowance from three annas a mile to a fraction over one and half annas. Were a private company to break contract in such a flagrant way a court of law would very soon uphold the original rules, but a Government official can say nothing, must simply grin and bear it as stated. What guarantee has an officer that an order may not come out stating that owing to the smallness of the work to be done in a certain year Engineer pay was to be cut fifty per cent., or that each man was to be reduced to the grade below his present one? To show how different men are treated I will merely point to the way in which those who pass the prescribed tests at Roorkee are posted. Not unseldom a civilian passes out first on the list. His parents during the time he is there bear the expenses of his maintenance and tuition, yet he is by the rules posted as an Engineer apprentice, and draws Rs. 100 per mensem. This in itself is not very unfair, as the cost to the State of his education is more than he pays, and as compared with other Civil Engineers the amount he does pay is merely a fractional part; yet still Rs. 100, where a man has to buy horses and a conveyance to do his work, and to live like a gentleman, is a very poor allowance. The military man, on the other hand, is posted at once, even though be may have passed last of those entitled to appointment to the grade of second grade assistant on Rs. 350 a month.

During the time he is at Roorkee he is drawing his Rs. 250 a month as a lieutenant, and if he fails goes back to his regiment; whereas if the civilian fails he has nothing to fall back on, and loses his two years' expenditure in cash, though, perhaps, not in experience. The old argument, viz., that the military man has had his commission by purchase, uniform, &c., to keep up, is fully compensated for by the fact that at any time of his career if the Department of Public Works does not pay so well as the military line he can fall back on that; in other words, the military man has two professions, either of which he can take up at the time when one or the other pays the best, whereas the civilian has only one, and must stand or fall by that. Major Lang, R.E., the energetic Principal of Roorkee, has repeatedly pointed out the injustice done to some of the best of the pupils and endeavoured to obtain their appointments as third grade assistants, but hitherto without success.

As regards the Cooper's Hill College men, they obtain the start of the old Stanley Engineers by commencing on Rs. 350 a month instead of being third grade; but they will find that their prospects are not one whit better by so doing, their covenants are so much waste paper, except as regards the penalties attaching to them. Government binds itself to nothing, and even if it does, it ignores its responsibility at the first opportunity. Their only plan is to protest against the present Pension Rules, and not to come out until, so far as they are concerned, they are modified. The Government of India is like an old apple-woman holding out three fine apples and crying "six a penny fine apples," but when the would-be purchaser, after paying his penny, demands the other three, he is presented with three rotten ones.

The method of promotion by merit is no doubt a good one, but it is often used as an argument by which great injustice is done. Vacancies are sometimes ready, but which are not filled up, and when thosenior applies for reasons he is told that Government superiors are not to be argued with, and that the rule of merit answers every argument. So it might if the officer applying had not been recommended, but it does not do so when the contrary is the case, or when no one is promoted, as it would be idle to say no one is deserving enough (videnderneer letter attached, and taken from Pioneer, June 13, 1876).

COOPER'S HILL.

SIR,—In your issue of a few days since it appeared that, as a general prospect, it might be foretold that Cooper's Hill men would probably attains the rank of superintending engineer with a salary of Rs. 1,100 a month in twenty years from the commencement of their service, and in an issue of a day or two previous it was also clearly and distinctly shown that for the past fifteen years there has been a regular retardation in the rate of promotion, which there is every reason to fear is likely to become worse and worse. You further show that of the Stanley Engineers who came out in the year 1850, or seventeen years since, not one had as yet attained the permanent rank of superintending engineer, and that only seven had become first grade executives. In the face of these facts it will be difficult to induce the most sanguine of the Cooper's Hill men to believe in their realising their visions of becoming superintending engineers in twenty years, or if they do, it is feared that they will be bitterly disappointed. Just a word as regards their prospects of pension. Supposing they are fortunate enough to become executive engineers of the first grade, and that they are unfortunate enough to have to retire on medical certificate before they have rendered twenty-five years' actual service—no very unlikely contingency—these then, elderly and worn-out men, would be eartitled to a munificent pension of Rs. 2,000 per annum, which at the current rate of exchange represents about £165 a year. It might be argued by the sanguine ones that they might supplement this sum by something saved from their salaries. To these we would say, inquire of any of yous.

friends in the P. W. D. what their prospects are of having saved more than enough to carry them home? The result would not be very encouraging. We would add a word of advice to parents before they devoted £1,000 to put their sons through the Cooper's Hill College course; to look around them and seek for one of the many ways in which £1,000 might be more profitably invested for their sons' benefit than in speculating for a place in the P. W. Department, and adding to the number of men who feel, when too late, that they have made a FAUX PAS.

Thus far the Department of Public Works has done good work,

Thus far the Department of Public Works has done good work, and, though failures have occurred, it is probable not more have hap pened than would be likely to have occurred under any other cheese-paring Government. However, the members hope that better times are coming, and that they are not far off.

LORD LYTTON AND THE JUDGES.

The Madras Times holds that Lord Lytton is likely to find that he has brought a hornet's nest about his ears by his impulsive conduct in re the Fuller case, if it be true that the High Courts have resolved to take the matter up seriously. In every constitutional country it is deemed a most mischievous thing for the Executive Government to interfere with the judicial discretion of the Judges, and a Prime Minister of England who permitted himself to put such pressure upon judicial officers as Lord Lytton has attempted to place upon Mr. Leeds, and the High Court Judges would very soon find himself in troubled waters. To punish a subordinate judge for exercising his judicial discretion within the limits of the law, and under the supervision of the superior court, is a very high-handed proceeding; but for a newly-arrived Viceroy to tell the experienced judges of a High Court that they do not know their duty, and must be taught by him, is ludicrous as well as serious. It is ludicrous on account of the conceit it exhibits, and serious on account of the want of respect it shows for constitutional usages.

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.

The Pioneer thinks that the evils that flow from the annual influx of frivolous tourists into India had something to do with Lord Salisbury's speech at Cooper's Hill. Thrown suddenly into the midst of a very complicated state of things, and without any adequate materials for the conclusions which, with the impatience natural to mankind, they are anxious to draw, these gentlemen are very apt to see more than exists, and to reason from false premises. We in India know what the companions of the Prince of Wales must have had in the way of opportunity of knowing any part of this vast country; about as much, perhaps, as they could have had in Portugal or Spain. The estrangement between the European settlers or officials and the people of the country, which they described to Lord Salisbury on their return, either does not exist, or, so far as it does, is on the whole beneficial. The handing over the administration to Asiatics would not diminish it, and would be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive of serious described to be productive described to be productive of serious described to be productive described to be prod ductive of serious danger to the people at large. But Pardolph, Poins, and Peto, though serious-minded and omniscient gentlemen, know better, and the Secretary of State accepts their verdict. Lord Salisbury, however, ought to have some sort of acquaintance with Indian history. He ought, one would think, to know what has been done in the way of administrative reform since the days, let us say, of Lord W. Bentinck. He will hardly find in that record any evidence either that the Indian Civil Service has been deteriorating, or that it is likely to be improved by an infusion of Bengali Babus. On the contrary, he will find that the deep disorder so long visible in India was no other than what is still to be seen in Turkey in Persia and in other Eastern countries. still to be seen in Turkey, in Persia, and in other Eastern countries, the general incapacity of Orientals for firm, and yet humane public In the history of the past he would find corroboration of what might be expected from observation of the present. Look at Talboys Wheeler's bitter extract from the testimony of travellers to the condition of the Mogul Empire in its palmy days. The quotastions from Roe, De Catrou, and other Europeans of the time, show ostentatious luxury, reckless extravagance, subservience to the strong; towards the weak a chain of cruelty extending from the Emperor on the throne to the village beadle. Pursue the tale into Emperor on the throne to the village beadle. Pursue the tale into the age that followed the fall of that evil system, and study the ensuing anarchy as shown by Mr. Keene. Observe the state of Hindustan under Persian, Mahratta, or Frenchman; the native agency is sometimes Hindu, sometimes Mussulman, always impotent, save for evil. Envy, jealousy, war, among the chiefs; the people despoiled, neglected, wasted by famine. Every now and then a great man appears, an adventurer from some foreign land, but he has no successors. Reared in a purple stye, the sons of such but he has no successors. Reared in a purple stye, the sons of such a man inherit but to abuse his power. Actus parentum pejor avis tulit progeniem vitiosiorem. It may be from physical causes too subtle and remote for analysis, but these are the facts; all cultivated products degenerate in this country, and revert towards their cruder type; even the most familiar objects and things that thrive almost everywhere—wheat, potatoes, carrots, sheep, horses—why not men? In the first foundation of British supremacy this was not perceived. The services of Europeans were needed to fur nish "the investments" out of which the dividends of the Company were to be provided; the administration was left to the Ram Narains, the Reya Khans of the day. It broke down, and chaos supervened. Then came Cornwallis, Wellesley, and an organised service. It was a step forward, though complete purity and efficiency did not follow at once. The officials, separated by a long seavoyage from the Europe of their day, lost a good deal of their culture, mixed with a native gentry, and "learned their waya." The results are shown in Shore's Letters. If the purified administration, the careful settlements of land revenue, the protection of the people against the extravagance of London, and the tyranny of their own chiefs against partial justice and unusual imposts, are in any degree creditable, it is to the new Civil Service that the credit is due. Beginning, not with the beginning of competitive examination so much, as with the emancipation of the middle classes, and all that followed the political revival of Europe in 1830, the improvement has been steadily proceeding. It has now resulted in a system which the people trust, though tyrants may not love it, and which will succeed so long as it is allowed to preserve a standard of energy, honesty, and independence in a society of luxurious barbarism, and under a Home Government tainted with party politics, and greed of gain.

PUBLIC WORKS EXTRAORDINARY.

The Pioneer points out that a mass of misconceptions springs from the entanglement of accounts relating to extraordinary public works with those of the ordinary revenue and expenditure of the country. The unfortunate adjective "extraordinary" applied to the works in itself gives the impression that they are of a superfluous or publicly luxurious nature; and although no one in this country is unaware of their true character, the mere phrase has unquestionably set opinion in England on a wrong track about Indian finance; and in these days misconceptions about Indian affairs in England should not be treated with indifference. If the works in question were called "remunerative undertakings," some advantages might be gained beyond the mere improvement of official language. People would be less likely than now to argue at a time of financial embarrassment that the stoppage of remunerative public undertakings would benefit the revenue. Not, indeed, that a mere change of names would affect such considerations as those which have nearly brought about the stoppage in question, but it might pave the way for the disentanglement of extraordinary Public Works accounts from those of ordinary State outlay. At present, as we have seen, certain sums are actually diverted from ordinary. dinary revenue every year to be invested in remunerative public undinary revenue every year to be invested in remunerative publiculdertakings. This year the amount was less than usual, but latterly, as a rule, it has been equal to about four millions sterling per annum. Indeed, restoration of the Soane and Ganges Canal estimates to the original level will have brought up the total again to the usual amount. Now, even although the objects to which this money is devoted may be manifestly promising, though the advantages of the investment may not be questioned on their merits, it is clear that Government has a very plausible case when it save at a period of financial embarasment plausible case when it says, at a period of financial embarassment

"This year we cannot afford to make any fresh investment."

But, examined more closely, this case will be seen to be merely plausible, and the true character of extraordinary Public Works expenditure would become clear if the disentanglement of accounts of which we have spoken already could be carried out. Properly, there ought not to be a word said in the April budget about extraordinary public works. The theory of these is that they are of a nature sufficiently remunerative to make it worth the while of capitalists to energia in them. For all purposes of our present experiment. we may assume that this is the case. Whether particular extraordinary public works are profitable or not, is a question of detail. They are all supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in a supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in a supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and in the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when they are undertaken; and the supposed to be so when some mistakes have been made in the past, that is all the more reason why the Government in the Public Works Department is likely to be careful, and not make similar mistakes in future. Well, then, it would pay capitalists to construct the works which Government undertakes under the extraordinary class. If there were more private capital in India, and more private energy, such works would perhaps be constructed by private enterprise; but as things are, Government has, besides its other functions, to be a great company for the development of Indian resources. It has to find the capital for this runnear which India has not and which the capital for this purpose which India has not got, and which European capitalists know too little about this country to bring forward at their own risk. And where should it obtain that capitall from its country to bring forward at their own risk. From its own surplus revenue, as at present? Certainly not. From the capitalists of the world at large; from the men who would spontaneously come forward to develop Indian resources if they knew enough about the country to see how this could be done, and whose deficiency of local information the Government of India is in a position to supply. The whole transaction is as round in its political economy as if Bastiat had chosen it for an illustration. The capitalist lends his money to Government, and is content with a smaller return than if he had himself been the constructor of the canal or railway required, because he escapes all commercial risks. Government earns a profit for itself over and above the interest it pays on its borrowed capital, which surplus profit is the reward of its local knowledge and sagacity. And what great and important conclusion follows from this? That the theory of limiting expenditure on extraordinary public works by reference to the sums Government may have to spare any year from its regular revenue is an absolutely false theory. The limit should simply be that which is imposed by the caution of Government in not taking up new undertakings, till it is reasonably certain of their ultimate success. But to limit such undertakings when their profitable nature is demonstrable, and the capital of the world available for the Government of India to take up to any extent it may require, is to neglect opportunities, not to economise public money.

THE FULLER CASE.

In a letter to the Delhi Gazette, dated 2nd Aug., Mr. Fuller gives the following account of the circumstances of his case:—"A few days prior to the happening of the event which has formed the subject of his Lordship's minute, I may say that, preparatory to my family taking their usual evening drive, the conveyance, a waggonette, was led up to the door by my coachman alone, who was holding the horse's head, whilst my family were trying to enter the seats behind the driving box. My wife, who was then in a very delicate state of health, had got in, and was about seating herself, when the coachman, suddenly letting go the horse's head, came round to put the steps up; the animal started off, causing my wife to lose her equilibrium, and she was falling bodily out head foremost, but was fortunately saved by a young gentleman standing below waiting to get in. As she was tumbling out, he stopped her career by thrusting her back on to the seat, and thus prevented what otherwise might have been a lamentable accident. Seeing how narrowly my wife had escaped from either death or severe bodily injury, I there and then gave strict injunctions to the coachman never to bring the trap to the door without being accompanied by a syce who was on all occasions to assist my family in, close the door, and put up the steps. This order, however, I regret to say, was systematically disobeyed, and on the Sunday morning on which the sad results occurred, the syce was again not at his post.—I grew angry with the coachman, and insisted upon the man's immediate attendance; after repeated calling he was aroused from his sleep, and appeared half naked with a "dhotie" about his loins and a blanket about his head. When questioned as to his absence, instead of expressing regret he grew insolent, and began excusing himself on various pretexts, one of which was that he was saddling a horse at the time, although his drowsy appearance showed unmistakably that the man had just awoke from his sleep. This naturally irritated me, and with my gloved and unclosed hand I struck him a couple of slaps over the face and head; he thereupon became more insolent, when with a view to abate the nuisance I clutched at the blanket on his head, but found I had seized his hair. I gave this a slight twitch, and the man either fell or sat on the ground. Immediately he fell he got up and bolted away at a sharp pace into the compound opposite my house. I jumped into my trap and drove to church. Whilst passing the compound of the house into which the man had run, my family saw him seated behind an out-house yelling out lustily that he had been struck and would go to the Magistrate's Court. Nothing more transpired, and I gave the circumstance no further thought: when suddenly during service a friend stepped in and touching me on the shoulder, whispered in my ears that I had better look out, as the man whom I had struck was being conveyed to the Thanna by his friends, who said he was dying. I pooh-poohed the whole affair, remarking to my friend that the fellow must be scheming, telling him, however, that so soon as service was over I should see to the matter. Immediately the service concluded I drove to the police-station, and found to my surprise that my friend's suspicions were not groundless, for to my horror and astonishment I found the man said to be dead in the Thanna stretched out on a charpoy; feeling assured, however, that there could possibly have been nothing in my conduct which could have brought about such an event, and suspecting foul play, I set the ladies of my family down and proceeded at once to get medical the ladies of my family down and proceeded at once to get medical attendance, driving to Dr. Tayler's, the Superintendent of the gaol, the nearest medical man, but finding him engaged, drove to the Civil Surgeon's, Dr. Christison; he too was away from home; I then proceeded to the magistrate, Mr. Simson, who referred me to Mr. Leeds, the then officiating magistrate. I drove on to this gentleman's house, and reported to him the whole circumstance, mentioning in detail everything that had occurred, disguising or reserving nothing. Mr. Leeds took down my statement, and within two hours after this the police were at my house, and made the usual local inquiry, when matters were to what they knew. At this inquiry a most significant fact came out that the syce, after escaping from my compound, had met with a fall in the next. The above I may say is a correct account of the whole of the circumstances preceding the death of the syce, from a perusal of which it will be seen that within at least half-an-hour after the man's demise I had myself reported every circumstance connected with the assault to the district magistrate, that within an hour and a half after this the police had taken up the case, made the local inquiry, and taken the evidence of nearly every one they thought likely to throw any light upon the subject, proving most conclusively that there could not and had not been any attempt on my part either to suppress or disguise any of the facts, but that these facts were elicited as they really and truly occurred.

"The foregoing will show that, so far as the force or violence used towards this servant went, it was very slight indeed; that, in fact, it was of such a nature as no one would for a moment hesitate to use; that it was inflicted simply by way of chastisement without the slightest knowledge or intention of causing either hurt or death, which was neither foreseen, expected, nor intended. It is evident that the moment the man fell he sprang to his legs, and escaped with all haste into another compound, from whence he was heard threatening me with the pains and penalties of the law. The medical evidence conclusively proved that, though the man died from rupture of the spleen, that organ was in so diseased a condition and so abnormally enlarged that the slightest blow or fall would have caused death. That the man after quitting my compound had a fall in the next, and that had he received any serious injury at my hands he would not have been capable of any exertion afterwards."

STATION TALK.

MUSSOORIE, Aug. 4.—It was a curious coincidence that the remarksin my last letter about the cowardly practice of thrashing natives should have been penned just before now the famous letter of the Government of India on the Fuller case burst on our Indian world. Of course, the matter has been a great deal talked over up here, and the general opinion may be said to be unfavourable to the letter, which is considered as injudicious and unconstitutional. Englishmen, that is, thinking Englishmen, are prone to look upon any exercise of power by the executive over the judicial branch in matters purely judicial as a breach of the fundamental conditions which rendered a separation of these branches necessary. We have been accustomed to look to our High Court as the proper authority to decide whether or not a magistrate or judge has duly performed his duties, and to fancy that in this respect the High Court could be controlled and censured by Parliament alone. We had an idea, too, that we had left: far behind us those barbaric ages in which the decisions of the bench were swayed by the vox populi, or the vox gubernatoris, but apparently weare not out of them yet. Of course, we are curious to know what the High Court will do about the matter. One thing seems to me certain, that is, that if they act temperately and firmly they must get the best of it; as they have law, logic, and precedent on their side. There should be at all events a very pretty little row, which will enliven us in this dull weather. As to the merits of the case, taken apart from all other questions, we at Mussoorie fancy that. Mr. Fuller was found guilty of the proper offence, but punished rather lightly. Still there was nothing especially striking to ordinary minds in the crime, and one cannot help wondering if there was not some little motive in the back ground which produced the back ground which ground which ground which ground which ground which ground which ground ground which ground gr brutum fulmen. Had Mr. Fuller been fined Rs. 300 instead of Rs. 30, we firmly believe that everybody, including the Governor General himself, would have been happy. I am glad, though, that so fearless a protest was made against the ill-treatment of natives. Though thrashings are not so common as in the old days, still they are by no means as few and far between as they should be. In all clubs and public institutions, such as libraries and assembly rooms, I believe the servants are specially protected by the rules, and I have known two or three instances of members of clubs being fined pretty heavily by the committee for even slight acts of violence towards the servants. Of course, it is not in human nature never to strike a native, and I would have defied even Moses to keep his temper always with them, but it should be very rarely and sparingly done. I recollect years ago when down in the plains I had a bearer who was stupid and careless beyond all conception. I was out in camp, who was stupid and careless beyond all conception. I was out in camp, and for three days endured his blunders, but my temper was rising to-boiling point. On going to bed on the night of the third day I pointed out to him a pair of lace boots, a pair of gaiters, and a pair of short riding-breeches, and told him to call me at dawn, as I had a long ride before me. Next morning I arose at break of day, and found it intensely cold, with a cutting wind blowing. I donned the riding-breeches, and the bearer laced up my boots. "Geeturs do," cried I, and the bearer turned pale, and began a pretended search for them, knowing well they had gone on a-head. Here was a pleasant situation. Altwenty-mile ride through such a wind bare-legged. sant situation, atwenty-mile ride through such a wind bare-legged. Can anybody blame me for kicking him on the spot? For three days I had borne with him, not even calling him a worse name than pagul, but the contretemps on the morning of the fourth day proved too much, and the vials of my wrath were poured out on his head Of course it was very wrong and very illegal, but I believe I should have blown up if I had not found an outlet for the pent-up wrath within me. Parlons d'autre chose; it annoys me, does this case of Fuller.—Pioneer Correspondent.

THE Bengal Times says that the quality of this year's jute crop is very fair, but that, at present, it is coming very slowly to market.

Miscellaneous.

ALLAHABAD BANK.—The Allahabad Bank, on the 8th Aug. declared a dividend and bonus of twelve per cent. per annum, and Rs. 2,500 were carried to the Reserve Fund.

MEETING OF THE BENGAL CIVIL FUND.—A special general meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Civil Fund is to be held at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 1st of November. The letter of the Government of India of last October is to be considered.—Pioneer, Aug. 15.

DEPARTURE OF THE HON. MR. PHEAR.—There was a pretty good gathering on Tuesday night, of European and native gentlemen, on the platform of the railway station at Howrah, to bid Mr. Phear good-bye. They were chiefly his personal friends, and they wished him a hearty God-speed as the train left.—Englishman.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING.—We hear that Major Gurdon, Deputy Commissioner of Loodiana, and two other European travellers, had a narrow escape from drowning in the Guggur while crossing that river between Umballa and Kalka a few days ago.

NARROW ESCAPE OF DR. BOURKE.—The Punjab Courier reports that Dr. Bourke has had a narrow escape at Simla. It appears that his horse shied and went over a khud. Before Dr. Bourke could disentangle himself the horse twice rolled over him. Dr. Bourke was much bruised, but no serious injury has, we believe, been sustained

The Young Maharajah of Puttiala.—On the occasion of the Saloona festival, on the 5th, the infant son of the late Maharajah of Puttiala was brought out from the harem, accompanied by his still younger brother, and placed in Durbar, where, however, he did not take his seat on the throne, but was presented with the usual congratulatory nuzzurs by the leading chiefs and courtiers.—
Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 12.

JUSTICE GLOVER'S FUNERAL.—The following telegram, relating to the funeral of Mr. Justice Glover, has been placed at our disposal, dated Galle, 11th August, 10.20 a.m.:—Glover buried at eight in the morning; funeral attended by military, civilians, local bar, and general community. The appreciation of the thoughtful kindliness of the Galle community will not be confined to the circle of Mr. Glover's friends.—Englishman, Aug. 12.

Native Civilians.—We noticed, some days since, a rumour that it was intended to appoint a native to the charge of one of the Bengral districts. We now hear that there is every probability of two districts in the Lower Provinces, one of which is said to be Hughli, being at no distant date officered entirely by natives, not members of the Covenanted Civil service. The report seems hardly credible, but it is believed in circles likely to be well-informed. We shall have more to say on the subject hereafter.—Englishman.

ARCHEOLOGICAL.—Some remarkable archeological discoveries, says Indian Public Opinion, have been made in carrying on excavations on the banks of the Kishenganga stream near Muzaffarabad, on the road from Abbottabad to Kashmir. One of the largest slabs of stone recovered is said to be so heavy as to require the combined strength of eleven men to carry it, and it appears to be sculptured with either delineations of Hindu mythology, or, perhaps, still more ancient figures and symbols of Budhism.

RUSSIAN ENVOYS AT KABUL.—The Kabul news-writer of Indian Public Opinion says that "two Russian officers, accompanied by a Tartar Russian servant, have arrived at Kabul, on a mission to the Ameer, the object of which is not yet known; but it is surmised that their instructions are to induce the Ameer to consent to the residence of a duly accredited Russian Political Agent at Kabul, and to pledge himself to non-interference in the affairs of Russian Turkistan"

FLOCOS IN THE JULLUNDUR DOAB.—A telegram from the Beas, despatched at 11.30 a.m. on the 11th, intimates that the country between the river Beas and Kurtarpore in the Jullundur Doab is covered with water, that this is the highest flood ever known, that the Grand Trunk-road is breached in three places, and that the Railway line is still safe. The Sutlej continues in high flood. Passengers who can postpone travelling should do so for a day or two at least; and we strongly advise the public to follow this advice.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 12.

THE JAM OF LAS BAYLA.—A special correspondent, who was at Mastang during the late Darbar, informs the Sindian that "the whole of the Sirdars of Jelawan and Serawan petitioned the Khan, soliciting his interceding with the British Government for the release of Jam Mir Khan of Las Bayla. This his Highness has done, and in a very cordial way, too. Arrangements for the protection of the trade routes have been completed, and, this year, caravans will pass to and fro without danger or injury. Everything promises well for the future."

THE S.S. "SCOTIA."—We have received the following copy of a telegram for the Marine Department, to the senior naval officer at Hangoon, dated the 1st August:—"Steamer Scotia missing. Sailed Calcutta for Penang, 18th June—supposed to be on shore on Preparis reefs, or adjacent coast. Please send man-of-war to search for her, and, if you think it advisable, call at Port Blair, and tell Commissioner to send steamer Enterprize to search settlement." A telegram in reply from Rangoon, on the 5th August, says:—"Diamond leaves here on Saturday for Andamans."—Englishman, Aug. 10.

ATTEMPT TO UPSET A RAILWAY TRAIN.—The Raneegunge correspondent of the Indian Daily News telegraphed on the 11th Aug.: "What might have been a fearful accident to the down mail train of the E. I. Railway has been averted. A rail was taken out of the line near the old Assensole station, with the intent to throw the down mail train of this date off the road. A down light engine, which preceded the mail train, ran off. By the driver's promptitude information was sent to Assensole, and the down mail was despatched safely on the up line to Raneegunge. Credit is due to the driver of the light engine."

PLEASANT FOR WINE-DRINKERS.—It is reported from Calcutta that recent rates of exchange have certainly had the effect of checking the import of wines and spirits into India. The impoverished Anglo-Indian has to restrain his thirst. Perhaps, few people are actually conscious of having denied themselves any particular peg or pint of claret, through remembering that the rupee was at one and seven pence, and yet on a large scale that must have been done. The way in which a whole community shows itself amenable to influences no one individual seems to recognise practically is one of the most interesting phenomena with which political economy is concerned.—Pioneer.

The "Soldiers' Kitchen."—At the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition for Bengal, to be held at Umballa, a conspicuous object will be (says a contemporary) the "soldiers' kitchen"—a gas-cooking ing apparatus capable of cooking economically for five hundred men. It resembles an ordinary copper, the apparatus consisting of a number of stove-chambers, the iron shelves for the reception of the viands, dishes, &c., being heated by gas or hot-water pipes underneath. In the door of each compartment is a glass pane through which the culinary operations are watched and directed, and certain taps turned on to regulate the supply of gas. The invention was originally tried, under the superintendence of the inventor, Mr. T. H. Phillips, of London, at Chatham Garrison, where it cooked for a battalion, Royal Artillery; but in India it is intended to be used with or without gas, being adapted for ordinary fuel.

ACCIDENT TO THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF AJMIR.—A letter in the Times of India says:—Mr. White, the Officiating Deputy Commissioner, had a sad accident some days back. One of the village Thakurs had trapped a panther, or, as the natives here call it, a dugla (meaning a cross between the tigress and leopard). Mr. White had it brought to Ajmir in a cage, and carried to Gungwana for sport. Unfortunately, the weapon selected to kill it with was a bhalla or lance. On being attacked on horseback, the brute made a spring, and severely bit Mr. White on his right leg below the knee. The season is unfavourable to the speedy drying of a wound, and Mr. White is consequently laid up in bed. The houses in the Dowlut Baugh are rather damp in the rains; it has therefore been thought advisable to remove him to Mr. Hogarth's, which is situated in a better locality in this respect. Captain Lapalle, the Assistant Commissioner of Beawur, has been called at head-quarters to remain in charge of the Deputy Commissioner's office till Mr. White's recovery.

The Recent Financial Resolution.—A correspondent pointedly observes, apropos to the recent financial resolution:—
"Cannot the Governor-General find something better to do than writing up 'I am starving' in the Gazette?" Economy applied to public affairs is sometimes so irritating that one is tempted to wish Government would adopt the policy of light-hearted lieutenants in difficulties, and make up its mind to "go a-mucker."—Piones, Aug. 14.—The late financial resolution of the Government of India partakes very much of the spirit of panic which is abroad on the ailver question, and, at the best, shows lamentable weakness, and a tendency to succumb to every adverse breeze, instead of grappling with it manfully. The rumour that Lord Lytton is about to retire at an early date gains in strength and circumstantiality, and is confirmed by his apparent unwillingness to buckle to his work with vigour. There is little in India to compensate a man of his temperament and proclivities for exile, combined with an amount of toil which, to any but the strongest man, must be painful drudgery. The choice of a successor, probably, lies between the Duke of Buckingham and Sir Bartle Frere; and I should be inclined to back the latter.—The Englishman's Saturday Evening Journal, Aug. 12.

BRUTAL MURDERS BY A PRISONER.—We regret to chronicle stragic event which occurred in the Central Jail on the 9th August:—Between twelve noon and one P.M. a prisoner under trial for murder, and who was confined in the solitary cells, managed to evade the jemadar placed on guard over him, armed himself with a thick stick, and, walking over to an opposite cell, knocked out the brains of a half-witted prisoner, thus killing him on the spot, and while he was asleep. The blood-thirsty ruffian then walked into another call where an inoffensive blind prisoner was lying asleep, and brained him also. He died in about five minutes. The murderer was supposed to be a lunatic, but had shown no previous symptoms of insanity, and in the morning when he was examined by the Superintendent there appeared nothing in his manner to indicate violent mania. His cell yard was left open, such (we should say with this case in point) being the mistaken order in all cases where prisoners are under trial. He was placed in the next cell to a condemned prisoner, so that the jemadar over the condemned man could also keep watch over him. The blind man's cell yard door was open, as he was only kept in the cell as a precautionary measure to keep him out of harm's way. Intimation was immediately sent to the magistrate of the district, and the Judicial Assistant, Mr. Bullock, accompanied by the district police officer, arrived about three P.M. and were engaged in taking evidence until six P.M. The murderer seems quite unconcerned at his atrocities, and indeed pleads utter ignorance of everything. He was sent up from Umballa on the 23rd of last month, ander trial for murder; he was reported to be a lunatic who might possibly attempt suicide, and was therefore placed under a guard.—

SUIT AGAINST AN OFFICER.—Colonel H. R. C. Moyle, who was ately in charge of the Victoria Gardens, was sued in the High Court on Tuesday last by Colonel W. C. Lester and Mr. J. E. Bodger, of Messrs. Cutler, Palmer and Co., the trustees appointed on behalf of his wife under an indenture dated 24th March, 1873, tor ecover the arrears of monthly payments of Rs. 90 which he had covenanted to make for his wife's separate use, as well as the arrears of subscripion he had covenanted to pay monthly in order to entitle his wife to a pension, derivable from the military fund, in the event of Colonel Moyle predeceasing his wife. The defendant admitted the arrears of the allowance for his wife to be due from December 1874, and as to the subscription to the fund he said he had discontinued it from April 1875, because he was told by the Secretary that he was simply throwing away his money, and that his wife, having been separated from him, could not benefit by it in the event of his death. As to the latter point, the Judge, Sir Charles Sargent, held that the defendant was quite mistaken, for his wife had never been legally separated from him by a decree of a Court, and that she was simply living apart from him by mutual consent. Rule 5, section 4, page 32 of the book of regulations of the fund referred only to widows of subscribers "legally" divorced or separated from their husbands, and not to a separation by mutual consent. Defendant put forward a plea that his wife had misbehaved, that he had separated from her since 1859, and that she was by reason of her mis-behaviour entitled to no support from him. This imputation was repelled by the counsel for the plaintiffs as unfounded. It was stated that Rs. 630 were due for the arrears of monthly payments of Rs. 90, and Rs. 552 for those of the subscription to the Military Fund. The judge told defendant he would have to pay the Rs. 630. As to the Rs. 552, his Lordship was not quite certain whether the plaintiffs could recover it without having themselves paid it; but he would consider the point before giving judgment.—Bombay Guzette, Aug. 11.

A CARRIAGE ACCIDENT.—BANGALOR, Aug. 10.—Colonel Moore, who was thrown out of his carriage on Tuesday, is injured more seriously than was expected.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 11.

ILLNESS OF THE MAHARAJA OF TRAVANCORE.—TBEVANDRAM, Aug. 10.—The Maharaja is rather seriously indisposed. The Resident has been urgently requested to return here immediately.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

CURRENCY NOTES.—A complaint reaches a contemporary from Burmah that the treasuries in British Burmah are short of currency notes, owing, it is said, to the head office in Rangoon having discontinued their issue to branch treasuries in the Bank of Bengal.

SYMPATHY FOR THE SULTAN OF TURKEY.—The Mohammedans of Madras seem much affected by the reports of the present state of health of the Sultan of Turkey. Numbers of them have taken to serenading at night, with suitable music, and may be heard chanting an anthem calling upon "Allah" to restore to health the imbecile Sultan.

SEA-BORNE TRADE OF BURMAH.—During the two months, 1st April to 31st May, 1876, 115 steamers and 121 sailing vessels, of tonnage, respectively, 60,797 and 7,322 tons, entered the different ports of British Burmah. Of those that cleared out, the numbers were 91 steamers, and 111 sailing vessels, of tonnage, respectively, 5,259 and 21,668 tons.

Ship Lost.—A Calcutta paper is indebted to the Superintendent of the Marine Surveys for the following information:—" The Italian three-masted schooner Condore, owned by Signor Pescatti, of Genoa, stranded off Krisna shoal, in the Gulf of Martaban, on the 29th June last, in latitude 15-45 N., and longitude 95-45 E., on her way from Rangoon to Cork, with a cargo of 1,035 tons of rice. She was supplied with three compasses, requisite charts and lights, and buoys, &c., near the shoal were distinctly marked, but no measures were taken to avoid the stranding. She was commanded by Signor Stephano Spotorno, who was saved with the crew in the ship's boats. The weather at the time of the casualty was cloudy and rainy."

Suspicious Death of a Soldier.—A private soldier, named Adams, belonging to the 16th Lancers, and stationed at Wellington, has met with his death under somewhat mysterious circumstances. The deceased formed one of a party at the canteen in barracks. This party broke up at about twelve o'clock at night, and Adams then started for the Wellington Bazaar. Two of his comrades, Christie and Jackson, followed at a short interval. Near the stream that forms the bottom of the ravine just below the Wellington Bazaar the two men met a native, who told them that at a little distance a soldier was lying on the stones. On arriving at the spot they discovered Adams, who was insensible and vomiting. One of the men ran back to the barracks for a dooly, and the man was conveyed to the hospital. A very deep wound was discovered in his forehead, just above the right eye. The man died on Saturday, never having recovered consciousness. A post-mortem examination showed the skull to be badly fractured. An investigation is being carried on, to sift all the circumstances connected with this case. It is possible that the man may have injured himself fatally by falling on the rocks, which, at the crossing of the stream, are very dangerous. The way the man took is the short cut from the barracks to the bazaar, and it is always used by the soldiers. We have often wondered why a permanent and safe road is not made at this place. We are informed that another European, also a soldier, met his death on the ghaut a few days before the event above noticed. In attempting to get at some water, the man slipped over the rocks and fractured his skull.—Neilgherry Courier, Aug. 7.

THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM'S TOUR.—His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos has not been many months in the Madras Presidency as its Governor, but he has been during this short time storing his retentive memory with wholesome facts, and has been quietly listening to the sentiments expressed by his councillors and secretaries, without himself giving any decided index as to what may be his future policy in carrying on the Government of Southern We have heard many thoughtless commentaries upon his doings during his brief tenure of office, but we are much mistaken in our observations if he does not ere long show himself in his true colours as a sensible, careful, and wise ruler. The Presidency town of Madras will, we fear, have still greater cause to grumble at his absence, since he intends, during the ensuing cool season, to make a tour of the most productive and important districts of the province. He will not, we feel sure, rest satisfied with a flying visit such as he made through a part of Ceylon during the two days he remained in that island en route to Madras in the Sultan. The Governor wishes to examine these districts thoroughly, and to traverse them in every convenient direction, visiting not only villages and the towns, but also, if possible, the more obscure corners as well as the most famous spots. He will thus see for himself, and also hear the opinious of those who reside in the districts, on all subjects connected with their prosperity and advancement. No one will then be able to say that he knows nothing of the country he has been sent to govern, outside of Madras and the Nilgiri plateaux. He intends in the first instance, we understand, to make a thorough and exhaustive tour through Wynaad and Malabar, and thence to Mysore, visiting Seringapatam and Bangalore, Mysore, Malabar, and Wynaad are three very important districts. Malabar being one of the wealthiest in Southern India.—South of India Observer.

The Floods in Mangalore.—A correspondent at Mangalore gives further particulars of the floods lately experienced there. In a letter, dated 31st July, he says:—"Towards the evening of the 25th instant floods for the first time in the year commenced with remarkable rapidity, and the strong winds that prevailed towards nightfall swelled the already increasing floods, which extended all nightfall swelled the already increasing floods, which extended all along the streets from the Salt Kotars to the Sea Custom House, a distance of more than a mile. The whole of the 26th idem was a day of grief to the helpless fishermen and others who had no home where to shelter themselves from the beating rain. The water rose high during the night, and continued rising higher still, when the poor sufferers little thought of the danger impending, and they had no alternative but to hurry away in boats with their wives and children to places of safety. It is a matter for congratulation that no lives were lost owing to this false feeling of security into which the people were lulled by an estimate of the floods of former years. The cattle, however, fared badly, as several of them were carried away by the violent current towards the sea. The damage caused is very great indeed. Places hitherto thought beyond the reach of the greatest flood have been completely under water. An idea of the immensity of the inundation may be formed from the fact that large strong stone built houses have tumbled down. Several hundreds of huts and about 300 houses have been completely ruined within the short distance of a mile and a half. Some 36,000 Indian maunds of Government salt, in the salt depots, were also exposed to the influence of the water. The arrack renter of the Mangalore talook is said to have suffered loss owing to a portion of his godowns having come down, and a large quantity of the liquor damaged by the water. The floods were not confined to the town and its suburbs. For miles and miles together both banks of the two rivers were overflowed to a distance of one or two miles on each side. The whole amount of damage is estimated at not less than a lakh of rupe(s. The extent of the disaster in the other towns and villages bordering the rivers is not yet known; though I learn that three lives were lost by the tumbling down of the walls of houses, and that the salt depots at Panemangalore (situated fifteen miles from Mangalore) have been injured by the floods, in consequence of which, the Salt Deputy Collector has proceeded thither to inspect them.—Madras Standard, Aug. 9.

DEATH OF DR. LIVINGSTON'S DOG.—Our readers will be sorry to hear that the dog Mabel, "the African dog," which faithfully accompanied the body of Dr. Livingstone from the interior to the coast, and was brought to Bombay in November last by Lieutenant Murphy, died at Belgaum a fortnight ago from inflammation of the lungs. Poor Mabel never quite recovered from the effects of that long and dispiriting march through the interminable wilds by the body of her old master.

MR. MONIER WILLIAMS.—We understand that Professor Monier Williams is expected to visit India again this winter. He is said to be writing a work on the religious systems and sacred places of India, to complete which it will be necessary for him to make a tour in the Madras Presidency.—Times of India, Aug. 18.

CAPTAIN GRIFFITHS.—We learn that Captain Griffiths, who has been at the head of the Garrison School of Instruction at Mhow for the past five years, vacates his appointment early next month. It may be a source of pleasure for him to know that he has made many friends in this Presidency by his obliging readiness at all times to assist those under instruction, and that those who have been under his instruction at Mhow appreciate his courtesy and acts of kindness.—Times of India, Aug. 18.

Loss of the "Monarch."—Intelligence has been received from Calcutta of the capsizing of the ship Monarch, of London, 1,364 tons, Captain Banner, with the loss of thirty lives. The vessel was bound from Rangoon to Bombay, with a cargo of teak. It was suspected that she was lost, as she had been long overdue, and logs of teak were washing ashore about fifty miles south of Bombay. The Peninsular and Oriental steamer Oriesu, arrived at Bombay, reports that she passed the Monarch, bottom up, 130 miles south of the latter port. There is, therefore, no doubt that she has capsized, the latter port.

SUDDEN DEATH AT WATSON'S HOTEL.—On Sunday morning, at about half-past six o'clock, Mr. W. Hayhurst, book-keeper at Wat-son's Hotel, was found dead in his bed. An inquest was held in the afternoon at the Hotel, and was adjourned in order that Dr. Sidney Smith might be able to make a post-mortem examination of the deceased. Mr. Hayhurst had only been out from England about three months, and as he had been low-spirited for the last two or three days, fears were entertained that he has committed suicide. After hearing Dr. Smith's evidence at the adjourned inquest, the jury returned a verdict that deceased died of heart disease.—Times of India, Aug. 18.

A New Association.—At a meeting of merchants and others interested in the cotton trade, held at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday afternoon, it was resolved that an association should be formed, entitled "The Bombay Cotton Trade Associa-A series of rules were adopted, with the view of placing the trade on a more satisfactory footing, and an influential committee was appointed. The want of such a society has long been urgently felt, and the merchants are to be congratulated on deciding to follow the constant of the contract of the low the example of other ports in protecting their own interests. No one who has perused the reports of the numerous cotton suits in the High Court some time back can have failed to notice the extraordinary diversity of opinion which has been shown with regard to the lex loci in such matters, and it is satisfactory to know that such disputes are now likely to be done away with, especially in a time like the present, when it is more than ever necessary that the export trade of the country should be as untramelled as possible.

Bombay Gazette, Aug. 11.
THE NEW BISHOP.—Our new Bishop, [Dr. Mylne, seems determined to keep up our interest in matters concerning clerical disci-pline, and to make us, if possible, take part in the dispute now going on in the diocese of Colombo between Dr. Coplestone, the youthful Bishop of that diocese, and the aged missionaries of the Church Bishop of that diocese, and the aged missionaries of the Church Missionary Society. Dr. Mylne prepared last week a letter to his clergy in his retreat on the heights of Poona,—where, we may mention parenthetically, his Lordship is "coaching" a boating team for the forthcoming regatta, and we might add, at these Poona boat races a young lady usually acts as "coxswain" in each of the boats and may possibly be present at some of the "coachings"—and after the cessation of his riverside recreations the Bishop asked the clery to exercise their discretion as to the reading of this episcopal missive from the pulpit on Sunday awaning last. The letter was read, but much from the pulpit on Sunday evening last. The letter was read, but much surprise was felt that Dr. Mylne should have thus prominently noticed the dispute between the Colombo Bishop and some of the missionaries for, though Colombo diocese is under the Metropolitan of India, there is no immediate prospect of a similar occurrence in the Bombay diocese, and we are left to suppose that the Bishop is so jealous of his authority that he takes this the first opportunity to remind the clergy that he intends to maintain his rights, and will use them as Dr. Coplestone has done. From this point of view this letter has been issued without the exercise of proper discretion, as the Bishop will, probably, soon find out, if he tries to push matters, which he seems not indisposed to do.—Bombay Gazette.

THE PALITANA RIOTS.—The long trial at Songhur in the Palitana State, in this Presidency, has at last terminated. The peculiarity about this trial is that Captain Hunter, the Assistant Political Agent in charge, was the judge and the Government agent who issued the orders for the advance of the troops and managed the whole business which ended in a serious riot and this prolonged investigation. A still more remarkable peculiarity about this case is that Bombay counsel was engaged by the prisoners who were tried, and a full short-hand report of every day's proceedings was taken and published in our columns. The trial has consequently assumed an importance which otherwise it certainly would not have had and can hardly fail to establish a precedent, so that in future the occurrence of important events and trials in the tributary or minor states and territories of native princes and chiefs will probably be reported in full in the English newspapers. Captain Hunter sat as judge, partly in his own cause, but he conducted the trial with fairness and discretion. He did not, however in his "finding" make any allusion to the remarks of Mr. Branson, the prisoners' counsel, on the causes of the disturbance, which Mr. Branson attributed to the want of discretion shown in the issuing of the Government orders; but perhaps that is not extraordinary as the orders in question were perhaps that is not extraordinary, as the orders in question were issued by Captain Hunter himself. The whole of the proceedings will now, we believe, go before the High Court of Bombay and the Bombay Government. There were twenty-six prisoners, who were all charged with rioting and murder in January last at the village of Timba in the Palitana State; one of these was sentenced to death, eleven were sentenced to imprisonment and hard labour for ten years, and the rest were discharged .- Bombay Gazette.

SERIOUS CHARGE.—After the examination of the witnesses in the case before Mr. Douglas Crawford at Haidarabad, Sind, in which Mr. Pope, Assistant Superintendent, Government Telegraph, was accused of causing the death of Ibrahim, a camel-man in his service, had concluded, Mr. Crawford committed the accused for trial before the Judge of the Sessions Court, Karachi. After going through the evidence, Mr. Crawford said:—"I must hold that in this case by accused's own showing the provocation was voluntarily provoked by him, though as I do not believe that it was provoked as an excuse for doing harm to Ibrahim (for I do not think that in any case the accused would have anticipated that the abuse and any case the accused would have anticipated that the abuse and threatening gesture alleged by him was likely to provoke Ibrahim to assault him) I presume it (the provocation) would not come under exception 1, Section 300 I. P. C., and which is applicable to sections 334 and 335 I. P. C. I therefore charge accused with causing both hurt and grievous hurt on sudden provocation, in order that it may not be necessary for the Sessions Court to amend the charges supposing the Judge to take that view of the case. My reason for not disposing of the case myself is that the accused being a European British subject and considering the position has helds in the pean British subject, and considering the position he holds in the service of Government, I think that he should be tried by a higher tribunal than mine on a charge which if proved would make the passing of a sentence of imprisonment necessary. It having been represented to me that accused is in a very weak state of health, suffering from great mental prostration, and that delay in the disposal of this case must aggravate his symptoms, and a certificate of his symptoms having been shown to me, the genuineness of which I have no reason for questioning, I would strongly urge that application be made to the Suddur Court for a special Sessions to be held at the earliest possible date for the trial of this case."

THE DARBAR AT MASTANG.—The correspondent of the Bombay

Gasette writes:—Tidings having reached me at Jacobadad that there was about to be a grand Darbar at Mastang, I resolved to be present as I knew no officer in the force there would be able to give the public an account of the tumasha, owing to the strict injunctions received by them from the authorities to keep everything secret. I reached Mastang on the 10th July, and I managed to amuse myself until the 13th (when the Darbar took place), by picking up scraps of political information. On the evening of the 13th, hearing tomtoms beating, and seeing a general movement in the direction of Major Sandeman's camp, I emerged from my temporary abode in a garden by the Jalawan camp, and managed by a little bribery (the correct political expression, I believe, is bundobust) to find myself inside the Darbar tent, wedged between a servant of Major Sandeman's and an orderly of one of the officers belonging to the Sind Horse. I was, of course, disguised, but nearly betrayed myself by a strong English exclamation, when some highly-flavoured sepoy planted the stock of his gun on my big toe. The Khan at length arrived, and Major Sandeman opened the proceedings by reading the programme of the present Darbar, the most remarkable feature in the address being the number of times his own name was mentioned. The object of the Darbar I gathered was to read out the treaty between the Khan and Sirdars, and to ask them individually if they would swear on the Koran not to depart from the terms therein mentioned; moreover, dresses of honour were to bestowed by the Khan and Major Sandeman on various worthy men, after which a salute was to be fired to signify that the treaty was signed and settled. The treaty was in due course read in very hithflown language by the Munshi, and all went smoothly until the time arrived for presenting the dresses of honour. Between Gour

Khan and the Chief of the Bengal Zais, sat Ibrahim Khan, the younger brother of the murdered Nowrodeen (Chief of the Minguis). When he was asked to put on the dress of honour, he obguis). When he was asked to put on the dress of honour, he obstinately refused, saying that he would keep it for Shukar Khan, the infant son of Nowrodeen, whose guardian he is. Ibrahim Khan was evidently ill at ease, and it was at once clear that he had not yet forgiven the Khan for the murder of his brother. I noticed the Chief of the Bungul Zais and Gour Khan smiling and exchanging glances at intervals, the mutlub of which seemed to be that they looked upon the whole affair as a farce that had been enacted very often before in Beloochistan; however, we must look to the result. If Major Sandeman, by sheer policy and without troops, can manage to keep Beloochistan quiet, as he said he could do, all praise is due to him, but should troops be found necessary to carry out his bundobust, then the public and the Government, I fancy, will begin to think less of his political powers as a politician. To prejudge, to think less of his political powers as a politician. To prejudge, however, the result of the mission is unfair, and I think that a great many of the letters that have appeared on both sides of the question were quite uncalled for, and in very bad taste; but the Punjabees are mostly to blame, as Major Sandeman's partisans commenced the paper warfare by a violent letter in the Pioneer, dated, I think, 23rd April. The injam being finished, the Khan will shortly return to Khelat, accompanied by Major Sandeman's powerful escort, and I hear that the troops return to their respective quarters about the end of September. To return now would be very hard lines on the sepoys, as the heat in Kutchee is terrible. There is also a rumour that the Khan will accompany the Sind troops to Jacobabad, in order to meet Lord Lytton in the cold weather. permanent occupation of the country by troops has, I hear, almost been determined on by Government.

He leaves by the M.M. steamer which takes the present mail, with the best wishes of his many friends for a safe return in renewed health and vigour. It is to his zeal and indefatigable labours the present flourishing condition of the above institution is mainly due.—Ceylon Times, Aug. 5.

COST OF THE PRINCE OF WALES'S RECEPTION.—By a statement just made public it appears that the reception of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales cost the Colonial Treasury Rs. 110,041. A large portion of this amount was for keep and cost of freight of horses and carriages, viz., Rs. 44,000. For the ball room Rs. 56,555 were expended, and Rs.13,554 for the Kraal. Illuminations cost Rs.8,453 and the ball ILLNESS OF MR. STEELE.—We regret to learn that Mr. Steele is so seriously indisposed that his medical adviser considers it absolutely necessary he shall leave for Europe by the next P. and O. steamer. This unfortunate change of arrangements will leave a temporary vacancy in the Colombo Customs, for which we believe Mr. Paterson is a candidate, with a good prospect of success, as well up amongst the seniors, who will of course expect the promotion. The Assistant Agency of Hambantotta will, it is said, be filled by Mr. Atherton, removed from Ratnapura.

LOTTERIES IN CEYLON.—It is singular, writes the Delhi Gazette, that while such vigorous efforts are being made to put down Derby lotteries, another species of gambling, yelept "Wheels of Fortune," should proceed unchecked. The latest instance we read of comes from Ceylon, where "a Professor Sloman" succeeds in selling tights of the right to jaranter willows the processor of the professor of the ticket after ticket to ignorant villagers at a rupee each, giving in return such valuables as a tooth-brush, a three-penny comb, or a packet of fifteen envelopes. The correspondent of a Ceylon paper mentions, as a significant fact, that the police inspectors who attend the drawings invariably draw prizes worth Rs. 10 or more.

RETIREMENT OF Mr. SWAN.—It is, we understand, arranged that Mr. Swan, who has been for some time in rather indifferent health through over-work, shall retire on a pension, being succeeded by Mr. O'Brien as Assistant Colonial Secretary. We need scarcely say how much his familiar form and features will be missed at the Council table, and at the old seat in the Colonial Secretary's Office. By ourselves he will be long remembered as at all times ready to afford us all the information that could fairly be given. To the Government the loss of his services cannot fail to be severely felt, and although the gentleman who succeeds him is gifted with all those qualities which essentially fit him for the appointment, he is necessarily wanting in the stores of traditional lore which many years of experience alone can supply, and which the retiring official possessed in an eminent degree.—Ceylon Times.

RAILWAYS.—Our railway extension question is still under consideration by the Executive and Railway Commission, and, if we may believe what we hear, some time longer must elapse before the survey can be said to be sufficiently advanced to go forward to the Secretary of State. The Morotuwa Railway contractors are pushing on the work quietly and satisfactorily beyond Mount Lavinia, at a spot where the foundations of a rather large bridge are now well advanced. No land has been as yet taken over at the other and advanced. No land has been as yet taken over at the other end, and no steps will be taken in the matter until the new Ordinanco has come into operation, when the progress of the remainder of the work will be very rapid. The continuation of the line to Panadura will be undertaken by the railway engineer, as the work will consist of little more than ballasting and laying down of the sleepers and rails. From Panadura onwards to Caltura the work will be placed in the hands of contractors. In consequence of continual heavy rains up-country, mishaps have occurred on the Nawalapitiya branch of the railway, causing some inconvenience by the interrup-tion of traffic between Gampola and Nawalapitiya; they include the sinking of an embankment on this side of the fourteenth mile, on sidelong ground, and a smaller slip at the fifteenth mile. Until yesterday trains have not run since the accident occurred, as the passengers, had they been transferred, would have had to walk round a distance of three miles in mud and rain. The Mahavilleganga has not been so high as now since 1872.—Ceylon Times, Aug. 5.

The tariff in force before the 1st of July will be resumed to all places beyond India.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders were received at the Bank of England on Wednesday for India Council drafts to the amount of £350,000 on we enesday for india council drafts to the amount of £350,000 (35 lass of rupees), the whole of which were placed at a reduction of \( \frac{1}{4} \)d. per rupee, as compared with last week. Tenders on all Presidencies at 1s. 7\( \frac{1}{2} \)d. received about 36 per cent. of applications, the amounts allotted being to Calcutta 1,947,000 rupees; to Bombay, 1,480,000 rupees; and to Madras, 73,000 rupees. It is apparent, therefore, that the 14\( \frac{1}{2} \) lass unallotted last week were not included in this week? in this week's amount offered. The effect upon the silver market has been to cause depression, although in the absence of supplies it is impossible to give a quotation.

Per Tigre, Aug. 27—Silver, to Galle, £40,000.

THE LATE SIR JOHN KAYE.—He has certainly added another name to the scroll of illustrious clerks whom the Old Company cherished, and Kaye will not sound insignificant, though coming after Hoole, Peacock, Charles Lamb, and Stuart Mill. Sir John Kaye's works are so well known that we need scarcely recall the biographies of Metcalfe, Malcolm, and Tucker, the History of the Afghan war, a sketch of the Administration of the Old Company, another on the progress of Christianity in India, shorter biographies of Indian heroes, the novel we have mentioned, "Long Engagements," a very readable story, and even an incursion into general literature in the autobiograpy of Cornelia Knight, though here we believe he depended almost entirely on the aid of Mr. James Hutten. ton. There is too a small volume of essays on optimism; and really in this age of dreary philosophy—of the disagreeable stomach-ache we have borrowed from Germany and called agnosticism—we think the public is indebted in no small degree to a man who takes again a cheerful view of life. The work of his old age was, as all know, the "History of the Sepoy War." For a writer who had had an more than one of the sepoy war." who had had on more than one occasion to describe recent events, he had hitherto escaped controversy with singular good fortune. Several of the narratives of the last volume have, however, been challenged, and will have probably to be modified in a later edition by the hand which takes up the broken threads, if such a hand be found for the work. As a writer, Kaye was vigorous and picturesque; his books are permeated by nice feeling, and a ready appreciation of the chivalric and the knightly; and whilst his sympathies are always awake also to the gentler deeds of life the reader perceives that his blood flushes the prest cosily to the trumpet-call. perceives that his blood flushes the most easily to the trumpet-call. He always writes like a soldier, a gentleman, and a Christian. It would be invidious here to call attention to defects; such as they were they sprang from an enthusiastic potuse and a tendency to were, they sprang from an enthusiastic nature, and a tendency to enhance the importance of subjects in which he was himself interested. He was not an unprejudiced man, but he was a truthful one, and he would have been the last willingly to hurt any one's feelings. On the whole, India has decidedly to thank him for long labours in her cause, and if he had no other merit, he would certainly have to be credited with making subjects readable, which in other hands have not unfrequently failed to interest altogether.

Mr. George Draper.

OFFICES—66, Old Broad street, London.

The DIRECTORS of the EASTERN TELEGRAPH COMPANY (LIMITED) are prepared to RECEIVE SUBSCRIPTIONS at par for the unallotted portion of $7,0,000 shares of £10 ench, authorised by special resolutions of 16th and 30th December, 1875, and of which a large part has already been taken up by the ordinary shareholders.

The ordinary share capital of the Company is £3,697,000, and the present issue of Preference shares will rank for dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum in priority to the whole of this amount, and to any future issues.

The outstanding debenture capital amounts to £232,000.

The Preference dividend (after completion of the payments on the shares) will be payable quarterly by warrants forwarded to the registered addresses of the shareholders. The dividend is not contingent upon the divisible profits of each year being sufficient for the purpose, but any possible deficiency will be pald out of the revenue of subsequent years.

The amount of the new capital now being issued is required for the duplication of the Company's Red Sea and Indian Ocean Cables (Suez to Bombay), for which a contract has been made with the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company, Limited. The new Line between Suez and Aden is to be laid by November 1 next, and the Aden-Bombay section by March 1. 1877.

The Company's Lines comprise the Cables and property formerly of the Anglo-Mediterranean, Falmouth, Gibraltar and Malta, Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta, and British-Indian Submarine Telegraph Companies (all now annalgamated into the Eastern Telegraph Company), and consist of duplicate Lines from England to Portugal, Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria, land Lines through Egypt, and a Line of Cable (now to be duplicated) from Suez to Aden and Bombay, with an alternative route by exclusive wires from London, through France, to Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta, and a Line of Cable (now to be duplicated) from Su it willbe more effectually secured by the laying of the Cables now under contract.

The Directors propose to pay quarterly dividends on account to the Ordinary Shareholders as heretofore.

The holders of Preference Shares will be entitled to attend all general meetings of the Company, but not to vote thereat.

The payments on the Shares now offered for Subscription

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company and the Special Resolutions authorising the issue, can be inspected at the Offices of the Company, or of Messrs. Bircham and Co., 60, Threadneedle-street.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CHLORODYNE is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, Ague. CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhoza, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery. CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, &c.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty' Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, 1st Dec., 1864.

WAS CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, 18t Dec., 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE OF PIRACY AND IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr., J. Collis Browse was, undoubtedly, the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, 13th July, 1864.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are-from Bombay, August 25; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, August 23; Calcutta, August 22.

THE issue by Lord Lytton as Governor General of India of the proclamation announcing that her Majesty will be pro-claimed Empress of India at Delhi on the 1st of January had placed society at Calcutta on the qui vive.

It is announced that the Viceroy will leave Simla for Lahor on October 10, and that Sir Frederick Haines will start on his tour of inspection about the same date.

THE young Maharajah of Puttiala will probably, it is said, be installed on the gadee by the Viceroy in January, if his Excellency's plans should admit of his visiting Puttiala about that date. The Government of India's report on the Indian Marine establishments has been referred to a Special Committee at the India-office. Major Sandeman was expected to leave Khelat about Sept 17. Captain Molloy has started for Srinuggur to meet the Yarkand Envoy, but no news has yet been received of the Envoy's arrival there.

THE Duke of Buckingham and the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, Lieutenant General Sir Neville Chamberlain, were expected at Bangalor about the close of August. They were to be the guests of the Chief Commissioner. Their intention was to visit the young Maharajah at Mysor in company with Mr. Saunders. The list of subscriptions to the Lord Napier of Magdala Memorial Fund now amounts to nearly Rs. 14,000, or, says the Times of India, about one-fourth of what is required for a good equestrian statue.

MR. A. MONEY, C.S., was requested by the Government of India, some time ago, to prepare a Blue-book, containing a history of Berar in Hyderabad, and of the circumstances which led to its aunceation. The information is probably for submission to the Secretary of State.

STRINGENT orders have been issued for the reduction of the North-West Provinces' establishment.

WE read that the Sea Customs revenue is henceforth to be administered by the Agricultural Department, subject to consultation with the Financial Department, in reference to any measures which would increase or diminish the revenue.

THE officer who has been appointed guardian to H.H. the Maharao Rajah of Ulwar is Lieut. Martelli, at present Assistant to the Agent of the Governor-General, Rajpootana.

In a supplement to the Calcutta Gazette Sir Richard Temple announces the dissolution of the Central Famine Relief Committee organised soon after the Town Hall meeting of Calcutta citizens in February 1874. There is a large balance of funds collected which has had to be disposed of, and it is satisfactory to find that several deserving charities in Calcutta and elsewhere have come in for a large share of the subscription The balance left with the Executive Committee at their meeting on the 22nd of July was Rs. 1,16,252 and odd. The Orphanage at Goruckpore, established for the support of the orphans received there during the famine, has allotted to it Rs. 10,000. "A sum of Rs. 56,000 will further be invested and made over to the District Charitable Society, the income accruing therefrom to be expended in the relief of distressed natives and Europeans in Calcutta. The balance of Rs. 50,000 has been set aside for the Home for Destitute Female Orphans in Calcutta, at present connected with the American Zenana Mission; Rs. 40,000 to be expended in the purchase of a suitable building, and Rs. 10,000 to be capitalised, and the income accruing therefrom to be spent in keeping the building in repair."

FROM the Bombay side we learn that the Government have sanctioned the bringing in of troops for the Central Rifle Meeting at Poona this year. Officers commanding regiments are asked to make a judicious selection of their best shots, so that the honour of the Bombay Army in the shooting line may be upheld. Says the Times of India, "Now is the time for Rifle Clubs and individuals to go in for practice on every occasion on which the weather will permit."

LORD EBBINGTON and the Hon. Mr. Clifford, who have been touring in India, arrived at Bombay on August 18. They are about to return to England.

THE following Government Notification pertaining to the furlough rights of medical officers has been issued :-

Under the authority of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India it is notified that, for the future, administrative officers of the Indian Medical Service will be placed, as regards furlough, on the same footing as officers of the same grades in the British Medical Service, as laid down in G.G.O. No. 1,088 of October 18, 1872. The procedure in obtaining such furlough will follow existing rules for the Indian Service. Should an officer exceed the six or four months' absence from India, as the case may be a will come under the operation of such furlough rules the case may be, he will come under the operation of such furlough rules as he may have elected, and his furlough pay will be adjusted accordingly. It is further notified that in the case of all future appointments on the Administrative Staff of the Indian Medical Service absence on leave in excess of six months on medical certificate, or four months on private affairs, will be considered as involving forfeiture of appoint-

THE "Fuller" case has been supplemented by a similar charge brought—not against a civilian officer this time—but an unfortunate private soldier, a gunner in the Royal Artillery. Coming so soon after the Fuller case, the charge against the soldier Buckland, of causing the death of a native at Saugor. had renewed public excitement, and awakened anew the prejudice against Europeans who are addicted to punishing their native servants. On Aug. 16 Private Buckland, of the F-11th R.A., at Saugor, was committed by the Cantonment Magistrate for trial at the Court of Sessions on the charge of voluntarily causing hurt (section 323) to a punkah coolie, who, after being struck by the gunner, had died, having a ruptured spleen. Bail was taken, with two sureties, in a sum of Rs. 500. The case will be tried by the Commissioner, Jubbulpore Division, at the next sessions held at Saugor.

THE Calcutta Englishman taunts an Indian advertising firm with its effrontery in issuing a collection of poems composed on the occasion of the Prince of Wales's visit. One Thomson, the Manager of the Crown Perfumery Company, conceived the happy idea of offering prizes, to the extent of one hundred guineas, for compositions on this well-worn topic; and over one hundred and fifty poets responded to his call. We suppose (observes the Englishman) we ought to feel grateful to Thomson for having suppressed over one hundred and forty-two of their compositions; but eight he has rescued from the common decay, and enshrined in a neat little book, as a sort of preface to the announcement of the excellencies of the Company's "Flower Fairies," and the wonderful properties of their "Opaline," or the world-renowned face powder.

THE total loss is reported off Sonapore, in the Ganjam District, of the steamer Malacca, bound, with a cargo of rice, from Calcutta to Galle. The crew, with the exception of two lascars, have been saved. She was a vessel of 594 tons, 100-horse power, commanded by Captain A. A. Hansard.

FROM Ceylon the news is, as usual, scanty. The Governor, accompanied by the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Captain Thackwell, A.D.C., Mr. Hearn, Private Secretary, and Dr. Kynsey, Principal Civil Medical Officer, left Colombo, on an official tour through the districts, by the colonial steamer Serendib, for Galle and Hambantota on August 7.

In one of his last Minutes, written just before his retirement on furlough from the North-Western Provinces, Sir John Strachey gave several illustrations of English Vandalism in India. Among other stories he tells one, "unfortunately true, of a zealous district officer who not long ago actually pulled down the sculptured columns from a well-known temple of great antiquity and extreme beauty, with the object of decorating a temporary triumphal arch through which the Viceroy was to pass." And a footnote says that this temple was at Ajmir. It appears however from the Pioneer that this story "is, in its essence, not true; the columns were not pulled down, but were lying scattered about; they were carried from where they lay to the place where the arch was set up, and carried back afterwards." This is certainly a very different thing from pulling This is certainly a very different thing from pulling down a temple. It is a pity that Sir John did not make a little surer of his facts before he proceeded to stigmatise Englishmen as barbarians, Vandals, and desecrators of tombs and temples in his Gazette. Nor is it easy to see why he should select his countrymen in particular for such attacks. Nothing—as the Pioneer truly remarks—"is more extraordinary than the utter neglect and indifference with which the Mohammedans and Hindus universally treat the architectural and archæological remains of their own people. If a man in India has a taste for building, he invariably builds something to commemorate his own name, and very commonly pulls down for that purpose the finest building of his predecessors.'

THE Report on the Government Charitable Dispensaries in the Central Provinces for the year 1875 shows an increase of about 17,000 in the admissions as compared with the previous year. As this increase occurred in a comparatively healthy and nonmalarious year, it seems to indicate a growing appreciation by the people of the benefits of the dispensary treatment. The Inspector-General is glad to find a large increase in the number of women attending the dispensaries, as that is a sign of the popular faith in the native doctors. The excess of admissions over the previous year was entirely due to an increase in the out-patients, the number of in-door patients having slightly fallen off. Malarious fevers, and the pitiable state known as malarial cachexy, are marked disease features of the Central Provinces; but during 1875 the aspect of affairs was brighter than usual. As in other parts of India, there were rather severe outbreaks both of cholera and of small-pox. Ophthalmia seems to have been more rife than ever, and bowel diseases were unusually frequent. Of the total number of in-door patients 12.4 per cent. of the males, and 12.8 of the females died in 1875. A large proportion of the deaths occurred among pilgrims to Allahabad and Puri, who crawled into the hospitals in a dying state from debility, dysentery, or diarrhœa. In his review of the report of the Inspector-General, the Chief Commissioner makes the following interesting comparison between Bengal and the Central Provinces:—"Fevers, which in this province form 22.3 per cent. of the total treated, in Bengal are in the proportion of 195 per cent.; but the greater severity of the type of fever prevalent in Bengal is shown by the far greater frequency with which cases of spleen come under treatment there; for while in these provinces the proportion of spleen cases to the total treated is only 0.7 per cent., in Bengalit amounts to 8.0 per cent. Diseases of the liver, too, which here form a proportion of only 0.2 per cent., in Bengal yield 0.7 per cent. of total treated. The proportion of cases of diarrhosa and dysentery is slightly greater in the Central Provinces, but last year the disease was exceptionally prevalent here. chitis in these provinces is more than double what it is in Bengal . . . and ophthalmia, which in Bengal yields only a percentage of 2.7, in these provinces yields 8 per cent. of total treated." These comparisons are very instructive, if the figures on which they have been founded are correct. But that is the The financial condition of the dispensaries is satisquestion. There was a diminution in European and an increase factory. in native subscriptions; and we are glad to learn that "there is rarely any difficulty in getting sufficient subscriptions in small sums for the support or improvement of dispensaries."

The death of Mr. Justice Glover, of the Bengal High Court, which occurred at Galle on August 10, was telegraphed the same day to Calcutta. When the High Court reassembled after luncheon the Chief Justice commented on the sad event in these terms:—"I am quite sure that his loss will be regarded, not only by his brother Judges, but by the whole Calcutta Bar—both native and European—as a very sad calamity. We must all feel that in him we have lost a true and valued friend. This is not the time, or place, to allude to his high social qualities; and it is very far from my intention to indulge in any vain eulogy; but I know that I shall command the sympathies of all who hear me, when I say that a more kindly, large-hearted gentleman, or a more upright and conscientious Judge never adorned the Bench of this, or any other, Court. On the part of the Bar the Advocate-General then begged to "add the unanimous and concurrent testimony of both branches of the profession in appreciation" of what his lordship had just said.

MR. GLOVER entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1845, and served for some years in the Upper Provinces, before settling down in Lower Bengal. For the last twelve years he sat as a judge of the High Court, during which time, writes the Englishman, "he has been one of the most familiar figures in Calcutta, and his face will be missed, by many besides his personal friends, from our public places and gatherings. His cultivation and good sense were well known to his friends."

An Anglo-Indian contemporary pays a just tribute to the zeal with which Mr. Justice Phear devoted himself to the interests of the natives in Bengal:—

Not only did he make a point of attending every meeting and of becoming a member of every institution, having for its object the advancement of their progress and welfare, but he would visit most inconvenient places in the interior to preside over some nascent society of young English-speaking Bengalees, and give them heart to struggle onward by his words of hope and encuragement. He was sincerely desirous of breaking down the social barriers that oppose themselves to a kindly and familiar intercourse between the Eastern and Western races, and, like the fabled Queen of Carthage, he strove to treat Englishman and Bengalee without off-usive distinction. Hence his unpopularity among a certain class of Eur-peans who cannot, or will not, understand how any member of the dominant race should condescend to interest himself in the ways, usages, customs and even prejudices of a conquered people. But while regretting the illiberality of our fellow-countrymen, however limited may be their numbers and comparatively unimportant their opinion, it is not difficult to account for the feelings that do them such little credit. . . . That which is really stage.

is the fact that it is only a small minority of the Bengalees themselves who are capable of appreciating the motives of Mr. Phear's conduct. In the eyes of the vulgar majority he is nothing more than a popularity-hunter eager to catch the applause of the groundlings, and vainly ambitious of leaving India, bending beneath the burden of eulogistic addresses and inflated testimonials. Conscious of their own inability to pursue an arduous and thankless course of well-doing from purely disinterested and benevolent motives, they refuse to believe that there is any higher and nobler aim than the gratification of a coarse selfishness mingled with feminine vanity and conceit.

In the marriage market an Indian Civilian used to be reckoned as worth £300 a year, dead or alive. The nominal value of Bombay Civilians now bids fair to rise yet higher, although the real value will remain much as it was, in view of the growing cheapness of money. Owing to the flourishing state of their Widows' Fund, it has been proposed that £400 instead of £300 per annum should be the pension granted to all ladies who come on the fund as widows after the 1st of July, 1876. This, says an Indian journal, will be equal to a marriage settlement, in the ordinary manner, of £12,000 in Consols, a sum which not one man in twenty belonging to the upper, middle and professional classes is able to settle on his wife when he marries. A counter proposition, which is even more liberal than the original one, is also going round for signature, to the effect that all the widows now on the fund should also get the increased pension, and to this amendment there is said to be little or no opposition. As widows on the Bombay Civil Fund forfeit half their pension if they marry again, it follows that each one of these ladies who takes unto herself a second husband will have £200 a year to help in keeping up her new home. That sum is equal to a settlement of £6,000 or so in Consols, and it is not every lady, whether widow or maid, who can command so useful a dowry. Thus the new regulation will not only raise the value of Bombay civil servants as husbands, but also of the widows they leave behind them.

ALTHOUGH Madras, like other provinces, has its Forest Department, it would seem that nothing is yet known about the actual resources of her forests, and that very little is done to mark off new or keep up former reserves. The Government of India have recently expressed a strong opinion in favour of de-termining once for all the forests tracts which should be re-served, and of acquiring in them absolute ownership on behalf of the State. In Madras the forest land is very extensive. The Board of Revenue mention ten forests, the united area of which is reckoned at between 5,000 and 6,000 square miles. No information whatever is said to be available for the other forests. The question of a survey has long been mooted, but nothing has yet been decided. At present there are little more than 100,000 acres of "reserves," and the plantations are not very flourishing. If wood in India is an article of prime importance every year's delay in marking out selected areas of forest will entail serious consequences in the future. More harm can be done by cattle, and the wanton felling of timber by villagers, in one year than it is possible to repair in ten. The base of the Nilgiris, for example, is fringed by low acacia forests. Every year, says the Deputy Conservator of Metapoliem, thousands of satin wood and other valuable trees are lopped and felled in the hot weather to feed the large herds of goats which natives keep there for supplying the hill market with meat. Native shikaris also do a great deal of harm. The Deputy Conservator found on one occasion a fence, half a mile long, " constructed with satin wood and ebony, and other valuable saplings, with staked gaps every ten yards for impaling deer. In their periodical hunts, they fell lanes from half a mile to a mile long, cutting down everything in their way, and setting nets for deer in the gaps." This wasteful destruction of timber goes on everywhere in India, unless stringent protective measures are enforced.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Bombay Statesman that "H. H. Holkar, being indisposed, contemplates retiring from the active duties of a sovereign for fifteen months. During his absence the eldest prince will rule, assisted by a council of five ministers. The change was announced from the Royal lips at a darbar held on his last birthday."

WE agree with our Bombay contemporaries that whatever schemes of improvement may be shunted in view of the need for economy in the public outlay the new railway designed to connect the Rajputana system with the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India line should not be abandoned. All needful sanctions for this line have already been obtained, and the undertaking is held, it seems, in Rajputana, to be most promising as a speculation, while its political importance is obvious enough. A junction was first to be effected between the Rajputana and Holkar lines, and the important link to be constructed would then bring these into correspondence with the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India line at Ahmadabad. The preliminary works were to have been begun this year, and it would indeed be a pity if the making of a line so evidently useful should be once more delayed for reasons of false economy.

WE are informed that the result of last year's crop of reeled silk in Kashmir has been no less than 260 maunds, or 20,470 lbs., as the maund of silk is calculated at 72 tolas per seer. The outturn reflects great credit on the unwearied exertions brought to bear on the cultivation of silk by the superintendent, Baboo Nohumber Mookerjee, to whom is entirely due the great progress that has been made. His services will no doubt be handsomely acknowledged by the Maharaja; and there seems no doubt that when the mulberry plantations are extended in all parts of the country, as they may be without limit, Kashmir will be found capable of supplying any such hiatus in the produce of old localities that may now and then occur, as has been the case this year in regard to Italy, &c.; for, independent of all other advantages, there has, as yet, been no sign of disease amongst the silkworms, and none will probably show itself if the needful care be taken to rear the worms with due attention to the cleanliness so necessary in all "magnanières" (silk-rearing establishments). Besides the quantity of reeled silk named above, there is the value of a good deal of floss silk, and numbers of pierced cocoons, to be added to the general outturn, which will probably amount to close on two and a-half lakhs of rupees.

According to the Times Calcutta telegram of September 10 some further details have transpired regarding the Delhi Darbar. The arrangements of the military force present will be two batteries of Horse Artillery, six batteries of Field Artillery, the 10th, 11th, and 15th Hussars, the 6th, 39th, 59th, 62nd, 63rd, and 92nd Foot, 2nd Battalion of the 60th Rifles, three regiments of Bengal Cavalry, eight regiments of Bengal Infantry, besides the Punjab Guides; one regiment of Native Cavalry, and two of Infantry, from each minor Presidency. Altogether 16,000 men and 48 guns; in one Cavalry and two Infantry Divisions. The Gaikwar and Sir Madhava Rao are already preparing for the Darbar. The Duke of Buckingham will attend. Brock and Company are engaged to provide fireworks.

From the same source we learn that the Government announces that a Railway Conference will be held in Calcutta next January. Representatives of the State and guaranteed railways, Chambers of Commerce, and European and native merchants are invited to attend. The chief object is to discuss measures for encouraging goods traffic; but the delegates will also consider various mechanical and financial questions connected with railway management. The Pioneer expresses a hope, in which all Anglo-Indians will cordially concur, that plans for cooling carriages will not escape attention. In the Legislative Council of Thursday, September 7, Sir A. Clarke introduced a Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to railways. It will not be passed till after the Conference.

THE same telegram states that the result of the Calcutta municipal election is now officially published. Only three Europeans, of whom two are civil servants, were elected. Only one European polled over twenty votes. Two Eurasians, two or three Mohammedans, and about forty Hindus were successful. Among the last are eight pleaders, five attorneys, three medical practitioners, and one editor. Few Europeans either stood or voted.

A BOMBAY telegram of Saturday last states that the floods which have caused so much damage in the Punjab and Gujarst are now subsiding.

ACCORDING to a Bombay telegram of September 12 the crop prospects are good all over India, except in the Dakhan, the South Maratha country, and Mysor.

A TELEGRAM dated Calcutta, September 13, states that the Imperial Assemblage to be held at Delhi on January 1, 1877, for the purpose of proclaiming her Majesty's title of Empress of India, will be attended by upwards of seventy native potentates.

WE learn from the Army and Navy Gazette that a new pattern bayonet, adapted to the Martini-Henry rifle, has been approved, and will supersede that now in use. The bayonet differs from others in length and form of blade. The blade is 221 inches long; it is equilateral, and has no outward cant when fixed on the rifle. The weight of the bayonet, with The scabbard locking ring and screw complete, is 24 ozs. differs from former patterns in being longer, and having, in addition to the spring in the mouthpiece, a long flat spring inside, which is secured by three rivets and washers to the leather, and tends very much to strengthen the scabbard. A saw-backed sword-bayonet is also ordered to be manufactured for issue with the same arms. The length of the bayonet is 245 inches; the length of the blade, 201 inches; width, 1 inch; weight of the bayonet, 1 lb. 9½ ozs.; weight of the scabbard, with springs, 7½ ozs."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—The idea of the Bombay Medical Missionary Society, whose eighth annual report we lately noticed, is worthy of all praise. To show the brotherly spirit of Christianity by the pain-dispelling skill of the physician and the sick nurse's gentle touch brings what should be the humane and universal "charity" of our creed much more vividly before the Indian mind than any purely missionary and theological effect—and then it is so directly useful. With the complications arising from the evangelising efforts of some missionaries before us, it is not unsatisfactory to learn that of some missionaries before us, it is not unsatisfactory to learn that 6,177 persons have been treated in the Society's dispensary, and that none actually professed conversion. This exhibits a proper spirit on the part of the officials. How great the temptation to work upon the "mind diseased," when the body is at its weakest, is perfectly well-known to any doctor, who, as house-surgeon, clerk, or dresser at a metropolitan hospital, has watched and restrained the zeal of visitor or chaplain. In Dublin, indeed, a hospital has been founded, on express condition that no minister is ever to be admitted. The old adage, too, is true enough :-

The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be; The devil was well, the devil a monk was he!

In its efforts and aims the Society thoroughly deserves success, and its position is yearly becoming more satisfactory. Last year the contributions received in England amounted to £370. 2s. 4d., and in Bombay to Rs. 42,427. Though the expenses are kept down to as small a sum as possibln, this total income is not very large, and leaves no margin towards the hospital which the Committee hope to establish soon. Some interesting eaces of treatment during the leaves no margin towards the hospital which the Committee hope to establish soon. Some interesting cases of treatment during the various "mission tours" are quoted. One peetawalla at Mahim, who came for medicine, was warned against intoxicating drinks, but said he could not stop taking daroo, as the god he worshipped required it twice a day! We told him to let his god drink it, but that he should not do so. He replied that "the god took it through him, as he took care of the god," and then he seems to have declined conversion. There was another case, where a woman, who had lost three toes by accident. refused to have her foot dressed nim, as ne took care of the god," and then he seems to have utclined conversion. There was another case, where a woman, who had lost three toes by accident, refused to have her foot dressed until she had been to the village god. "The [Native] Roman Catholics," it is said, "are very like the Hindu in their manners and customs, most of them cannot read, and they believe in village gods, just as the Kolis do."

GOVERNMENT BILLS ON INDIAN PRODUCE.

A QUESTION of much importance in connection with the low rate of exchange on the rupee has just been debated in the Pioneer between its editor and a correspondent signing himself "A. H. H." It is generally admitted that one chief factor, if not the chief factor, in the diminished value of the rupee is the need of remitting to this country some fifteen millions a year for the home expenses of the Indian Government. If the whole or a part of this heavy sum could be remitted in the shape of produce, instead of rupees, the India-office, in the opinion of many people, would avoid the necessity of selling its bills on India at a loss of two millions and more a year. Such is the view enforced by "A. H. H.," and apparently countenanced by the India office itself, to judge from what Lord G. Hamilton let drop on the subject in his speech on the Indian Budget. The plan thus recommended would only indeed be a return to the former practice of the East India Company. In the present uncertain state of the silver market, and in view of the growing demand in England for foreign wheat, to make up for the shortcomings of English harvests and the ever-lessening acreage of our wheat-sown lands, there is certainly much to say for such a plan. As the Friend of India lately put it, "What can be more preposterous than that, while England is steadily importing £40,000,000 to £50,000,000 of corn a year from America, Russia, and Australia, at very high prices, we make no effort to carry thither the surplus harvests of our own tenantry in India, but positively suffer the scandal of seeing them ruined by the very abundance of those harvests?" Indian wheat can find a market in this country is evident from the increasing exports of that article since the repeal of the Indian export duty. In one year alone the trade rose from 20,000 to 90,000 tons. In the last three years its annual value has risen from £167,690 to £827,606. Nor is there any reason to suppose that the plains of Upper India could not yield a far larger surplus for exportation than the amount already sent abroad. It is likely enough that, with due encouragement, Indian wheat of good quality might replace a good deal of the wheat now imported from Russia and California. The growth of such a trade would obviously tend to benefit the mass of rayats in the populous plains of Oudh and the North-West Provinces.

But here steps in the economical question which divides the Pioneer from its correspondent. The former argues in effect (1), that Indian wheat cannot be put into the London market except at a since merchants would already be trading in it, if it were worth their while; and (2), that by such a transaction Government would be going beyond its legitimate functions, and descending into the arena of trade. The Government of India "is not a mercantile firm;" if public opinion allowed it to make money by mercantile speculation, it could take up some business more profitable than the wheat trade; and the proposal to enter on that trade is "tantamount to an accusation of profound imbecility against the mercantile world at large." Let us now see what "A. H. H." has to offer in reply on the other side:—

The Indian wheat trade with England is already a fact and not a dream. The mercantile world only imports wheat, or other Indian produce, as far as it is profitable to itself to do so. Its enterprise and capital have certain rather narrow limits, one of the most important being that drawn by the poverty of the country traded with. Trade requires a certain amount of wealth, that is, of available surplus commodities over and above the needs of the moment, in each of the trading parties. So long as the limited amount of English mercantile capital which India is rich enough to attract is more profitably invested in tea, indigo, spices, jute, coffee, or sugar, so long will there be no inducement for its application to a trade in Indian wheat. But the figures already given show that in a very short time since the export duty was abolished, mercantile capital, to the extent of four-fifths of a million, has found its way into this trade. Therefore, it is almost certain that a very much greater quantity of Indian wheat might be sold in the London market by any exporter who could afford to be content with a much lower rate of profit than will suffice the ordinary merchant. The Government of India is in the position of an Indian exporter. It would be highly profitable to it, and to the interest which it represents, to remit produce at a rate of profit far below that which will tempt the European capitalist into Indian trade. Even if the price realised in London only covered prime cost, freight, insurance, and other charges, there would still be for India a very valuable gain; (1), by saving the loss by exchange, which, if present rates continue, will be this year between two and a half and three millions; and (2), by keeping up the price of wheat in the interior, to the great relief of rent and revenue-payers. The fear of glutting the English market is purely chimerical, for labour is so much cheaper in India than in most, if not all of the other wheat-supplying countries, that India can, or can be made to supply wheat at

With regard to the objection against a trading Government, the same writer is "quite unable to see how it is more mercantile an operation for the Indian Government to invite its tenantry to sell a portion of its crops to an English bunniah instead of an Indian one, or to receive its land rent in sovereigns at a rent-office in London than in rupees at a rent-office in Allahabad. The sole difference in the mercantile aspect of the operation is, that one class of bunniah represents a better market than the other." Nor, looking at another aspect of the same objection, can he find that the Indian Government would be going beyond its legitimate functions if for the benefit of its revenue-payers it offered to take its land revenue or a part of it in wheat. If it is allowable for Government to convert its corn rents into silver at Cawnpore, it is difficult to see why it should be debarred on economical grounds from making the conversion into gold in London. "It sarely has as undoubted a right to convey its corn rent from Cawnpore to London to be converted into severeigns as it has to convey its money rent from Lahor to Bombay for the same purpose. One is no more a mercantile transaction than the other.'

On the whole we are inclined to think that "A. H. H." has made out a pretty strong case in favour of his particular scheme. In the present state of affairs, at any rate, the system of paying the holders of Indian Council Bills in produce instead of rupees might be made to work, as a mere experiment to meet a special need, without undue clashing with private enterprise. A Government which virtually grows its own opium, constructs its own railways and waterworks, and receives its share of rent from the land, already does many things which the rules of political economy would hardly sanction. Why should it not take a short step further in the same direction, if the public wellbeing were likely to be advanced thereby?

THE FULLER CASE REMONSTRANCE.—What has become of the remonstrance which public rumour declares the High Court of these provinces to have put forth early this month in reference to the Viceroy's minute on the Fuller case? Lord Lytton is unlikely to have made no sign if he had received a communication to which the independent attitude assumed by the High Court would almost give the character of a rebuke. The thunderbolt apparently lingers at Naini Tal, whence its consignees seem reluctant to hurl it against the imperial mountain.—Pioneer, Aug. 23.

SERVICES OF MR. E. J. CHURCHER DURING THE MUTINY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—I should be much obliged if you would be so good as to let the accompanying article from the Pioneer newsduring the great Sepoy Mutiny of 1857, appear in your journal. paper, referring to the services rendered by Mr. E. J. Churcher

I venture to make this request not only in order to give publicity to this complimentary notice of my friend's excellent services, but in the hope that the article in question may fall under the observation of the Secretary of State for India, and contribute towards a favourable consideration of Mr. Churcher's memorial, presented by him in 1873.—Yours faithfully,

Sept. 12, 1876.

Unreconded Incidents of 1857. It was only to be expected that the third volume of the "Sepoy War" would give the world many of those individual deeds of heroism and selfsacrifice which, indicative as they are of the capacity of the British race, go far to account for its supremacy in this country. In describing the disgo far to account for its supremacy in this country. In describing the distressing incidents of the retreat of the European community from Futtehghur in June, 1857, Sir John Kaye thus writes, p. 302:—"There was witnessed another of those acts of self-devotion of which the annals of the Sepoy War afford so many touching examples. Churcher might have made his escape (from the hiding place on the river bank), but Robertson was in such dire agony, both of body and mind, that he could not arouse himself to the activity of flight. So Churcher determined not to leave him. For more than two months he watched over the stricken artilleryman until death mercifully came to the relief of the sufferer. Then Churcher buried his friend, raised a mound of earth over his remains to mark the spot, and betook himself to the jungle. . . ." We have transcribed this portion of the story, not only because it is well worth being brought to remembrance, but in order to give point to the observation we have to make, namely, that it is strange the historian should have so entirely missed or avoided all mention of the remarkable courage and capacity displayed in connection with the defence of Agra by E. J. Churcher, a brother of this David Churcher, whose noble devotion to poor Major Robertson is, in the passage we quoted, deservedly placed on record. There being, as we have said, so many scores of instances of individual heroism and personal devotion amongst the stories of that terrible time, Sir John Kaye must have found one of his most perplexing tasks in deciding which of those incidents to embody in his narrative, and which to leave aside to take their change of heing preserved in histories. cents to embody in his narrative, and which to leave aside to take their chance of being preserved in biographies or recorded in local histories. We are not aware that the story of Mr. E. J. Churcher's remarkable services at Etah, in connection with the remoter operations of which the defence of Agra was the centre, have been so recorded. Therefore we may as well make up for the hiatus which many survivors of the mutiny era in these provinces will become conscious of as they read chapters IV. and V. in book VIII. of the "Sepoy War," though it is a remarkably full and carefully compressed narrative of "Mutiny and Rebellion in the North-West Provinces." West Provinces.

In these chapters there are only two passages where Etah is mentioned. The first of these is in the letter of Mr. Colvin written to the Governor General near the end of May, describing the deluge of revolt which raged around. He says:—"Aligarh and Etah, the two most important districts of the centre Upper Doab, are in a blaze of riot and ravage." The next mention of Etah is that which comes in as an incident in the description of William Edwardes's isolated and intrepid stand at Budaon. Kaye says:

—"But on the third day, as he sat at his lonely dinner, he saw an Englishment lishman ride up towards his house, escorted by a dozen horsemen, and pre sently he discerned the familiar features of his cousin, Alfred Phillips, the magistrate of Etah." This was on May 27. It was just two months later, magistrate of Etah." This was on May 27. It was just two months later, the situation meantime having become every way more desperate, that Mr. Churcher was asked by the then rapidly-sinking Lieutenant Governor to proceed to Etah on the perilous service which he undertook and successfully carried through. Of that service we can here give only a brief account; but the two significant passages we have quoted from the history may serve to light up our slight sketch of what was attempted and accomplished by this non-official Englishman who proved himself as discreet as he was courageous. The significance of the references we have quoted will be seen when we remind our readers that Etah, the district of which comprises 300 square miles, is on the high road between Delhi and Cawncomprises 300 square miles, is on the high road between Delhi and Cawnpore, and at the time when Mr. Churcher's service was enlisted, it was on the chief line of communication followed by the rebel sepoys as they crowded up towards Delhi. The special occasion which induced Mr. Colvin to ask for a volunteer to proceed to Etah appears to have been that the Rajah had openly declared on the side of the rebels, and was becoming a Rajah had openly declared on the side of the rebels, and was becoming a great head centre of revolt, affording aid and succour to all the enemies of the Queen who passed that way. Mr. Churcher having, mainly on the suggestion of the late Sir H. B. Harington, agreed to proceed on the perilous service of attacking, and, if possible, of bringing in this influential leader, was invested by the Hon. Mr. Colvin with full powers as magistrate and deputy collector. This formality was accomplished on the last day of July. Mr. Churcher at once set about gathering a levy of horse and foot, who formed a very irregular copps, and were all natives. But these nameless warriors must have credit along with their plucky leader, for after accomplishing the seventy miles' march from Agra they took the fort of Etah, and the malcontent Rajah became Mr. Churcher's prisoner.

And this was no barren triumph. Within the fort much plunder of all And this was no barren triumph. Within the fort much plunder of all sorts had been accumulated; there were cannon, with small arms and ammunition. This was a notable feat in itself, even if Mr. Churcher had felt compelled to fall back upon Agra with his important prisoner; but this was not the brief issue. He held the fort and controlled the district until the Agra division was cleared of the mutineers, and order was restored. The late Mr. Reade, into whose hands fell the charge of Agra fafter Mr. Colvin's death, testifies that Mr. Churcher not only "restored authority," but "maintained it." In the first few days after the capture of the fort the position must have been perilous in the extreme. The district abounded with fierce Mussulmans in arms, the robber tribe of Goojurs, and the slightly more respectable, but more formidable foes, the clocal Thakurs, followers of the captured Rajah. The situation of Etah at that time, in reference to chances of relief by any European force, was also that time, in reference to chances of relief by any European force, was also one of extreme isolation. So Mr. Churcher depended on himself and the scratch but, as it proved, staunch troop that had followed him. He soon set about his civil duties. Within a month after seizing the stronghold he collected a lakh of revenue, which he was able to send in to Agra, to the great relief of the much-bested Lieutenant-Governor. In spite of the universal disaffection of the landholders around Etah, Mr. Churcher appears to have speedily attained a marked influence over them, for he was soon able to enlist 400 additional armed men of the district (very irregular, no doubt) on the security of the zemindars. How this was managed we do not stop to inquire; personal influence and energy must serve to account for it; but the report of this comparatively numerous force having possession of the fort under command of a resolute Englishman sufficed to keep at bay the numerous rebel chiefs around, and checked the career of rapine and murder into which most of them had plunged. Not a single European was left in the district when Mr. Churcher stormed and took the fort; therefore that event was eminently calculated to restore as it did the moral ascendency of the British name as far as Etah store as it did the moral ascendency of the British name as far as Etah was known: besides, as already remarked, strengthening the hopes and resources of the beleaguered Agra garrison. It must be remembered, too, that this bold invasion of, and stand in one of the mutineers' fastnesses was accomplished without the aid of a single regular soldier. After the fall of Delhi the district was gradually cleared of all malcontents by the operations of a regular British force, and then Mr. Churcher made over charge to a civilian officer, Mr. Daniell. Under him he served for a few weeks as deputy in getting the wheels of the social and official system to revolve again; but by that time Mr. Churcher succumbed to the effects of a year's hard service, and took sick leave to England. But our readers will be surprised to learn that Mr. Churcher received no public recognition, no substantial acknowledgment for the laborious and remarkably successful political service he performed under the orders of the lamented successful political service he performed under the orders of the lamented Mr. Colvin. Had that excellent man survived the dire struggle in which he bore so notable a part, we may be sure that he would have insisted on his brave emissary being handsomely requited, and that, too, as a duty which Government owed to itself. Subsequently to Mr. Colvin's decess, Sir H. B. Harington and Mr. E. J. Reade, both of whom were well aware of the perilous nature of the service which Mr. Churcher undertook, have also departed, or we should not have to record that the recovery of Etah August, 1857, remains unacknowledged by the State. But Sir G. T. Harvey, General Henessy, and Mr. B. Sapte are, we believe, all living, any one of whom could testify to the exact truth of the story we have given in outline of the Etah incident. We have done our part in rescuing the from the neglect with which the historian of the epoch to which it belongs has treated it—perhaps unavoidably or inadvertently. But, as David Churcher has his place on the page of Kaye, so his brother Emery will have his here. successful political service he performed under the orders of the lamente

Just one word more on the subject of mutiny rewards occurs to us. They have been given freely enough in some directions. The rebel Rajah of Etah, who was captured by Mr. Churcher, was somehow or other, we forget how, utterly abolished; but his small raj and valuable hands were given to one Dilsukh Rai, formerly a village writer on Rs. 10 per measure. This man was faithful at the moment of outbreak, and assisted the magistrate of Etah to exceed to Rudor, as described in a respectable. trate of Etah to escape to Budaon, as described in our opening paragraph. This Dilsukh the putwari was ennobled and made Rajah of Etah, while nothing has been done to honour the Englishman who made that transformation possible. We do not mention this with any grudge of Rajah Disukh's great good fortune, but the contrast is sufficiently striking.

RESOURCES OF MYSOR.

The Madras Athenaum holds that it is not necessary to go back to the days of Wilks for such information as we want of the manufactures of the Mysor Province. Meagre as are the figures, and unsatisfactory and defective as is the information, facts are to be deduced from official reports which are of considerable value. Silk, cotton, sugar, fibre, pepper, oils, &c., are all articles of manufacture, and though their value is not very great, still there is no reason why capital and energy should not be brought to bear on their rapid development. With the railway connecting Bangalor with the vast network that now intersects the whole of India, it cannot be said, as it was seventy years ago, that the practical means of opening the minds of men to the public benefits of commerce are neither numerous nor obvious. The presence of the iron horse has altered all rous nor obvious. The presence of the iron horse has altered an that, and it cannot for one moment be supposed that the line which branches off from Jolarpett to Bangalor is intended for military purposes alone, but the rather to tap the resources of a fine province capable of enormous commercial and industrial development. Before the Province can be really said to be opened up, the line to Mysor should be completed, as we remarked in a recent issue; but over and beyond this, we would strongly urge on the enterprising firms of Madras the necessity of sending to this Province agents to gather all the facts possible bearing on the establishment of paper mills, the manufacture of cotton piece goods, coarse cloth, sugar, and so on. It may not be generally known that the export of coarse cloth and piece goods from the Mysor Province to her Majesty's territories during the year 1874-75 amounted to 493,349 tons of the aggregate value of 16 lakhs of rupees. Of sugar, 1,071 tons, valued at Rs. 400,000 were exported, and we might produce a very respectable list of exports to prove that Mysor, though comparatively little attention has been attracted to it from outside of the a very little attention has been attracted to it from outside, offers a very fair field for men of capital and energy. That it is destitute of roads or navigable rivers need count for nothing in view of the fact that an extension of the railway with a cheap system of tramways would be amply sufficient for all commercial purposes. With a Government that need not necessarily be obstructive and annoying to priwate capitalists, the Mysor Province ought to have a golden future before it. What is wanted is money and energy. A certain amount of grumbling and dissatisfaction has resulted from Madras officials being employed in the Mysor Commission and a Madras Civilian having some time ago acted as the Chief Commissioner. To us it seems that Mysor is as much an appanage of the Madras Presidency as are Travancore and Cochin. Politically, commercially, from every point of view, Bengal influence is pernicious, misleading and wholly

THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

The Englishman remarks that Sir Andrew Clarke is now in this country for the purpose of reforming the P. W. D. system, and it is to be hoped that before he takes action in the matter he will not overlook the real evil that must be remedied, if any change for the better is to take place. The theory of the Department is that it is established on a system so comprehensive that, without any alteration in its code, or its practice, it will embrace every condition and circumstance that can occur. Now, this is an impossibility. The condition of India is at present that of the highest civilisation in some parts; while, in others, it is that of outer barbarism, as far apart as Central Africa and Paris, or London, in respect to any arrangement that could be made equally suitable for both places. For a rough, thinly inhabited, jungly district, where the only thing to do is to create communications as rapidly as the means of the district will allow, a staff of sharp, energetic young men, on moderate salaries, who have been through a course at Rurki, might, perhaps, be permanently employed by Government, under experienced leaders, with advantage. They would of course be provided with plans, instruments, lists of rates, and a code of rules for their guidance. Some arrangement of this sort was the origin of the P. W. D., and, with the same organisation on an enlarged scale, it is now attempted to carry out all the works of India, under a fixed is now attempted to carry out all the works of India, under a fixed set of rules that never contemplated the circumstances of the present time. The system that should be introduced, is that which has been adopted by all civilised countries, as the result of their ex-perience. For large imperial works, such as railways, canals, trunk roads, public buildings, and all the other more expensive and com-plicated requirements of civilisation, an entirely different course from that which now obtains should be pursued. The Government of all other civilised countries well know that it would be impossible for their revenue to maintain, not only all the professional men in the country, whose services they occasionally, or even frequently, require, but a whole host of foremen, workmen, clerks, and others, during their whole lives, besides establishing and keeping up all over the country large workshops, with expensive machinery, and vast stocks of valuable materials, which may be only occasionally needed. The proper plan would be to specially appoint for each large work a special staff of experienced engineers, or architects of reputation, according to the nature of the work. They should be selected in England, or out here, if they can be obtained, and they should be paid off when the work is finished. The smallest possible number of men should be employed on each work, as their pay would be high; and they should be strictly confined to their professional duty, as it is for that only that such high pay is necessary. To ensure the work being done within a fixed time, and at a fixed cost, it should be given, as at home, to reliable contractors, known to have means and experience. At present the whole land is filled with a permanent staff of all sorts and conditions of men, for whom employment has to be found, whether the country requires their services or not. The consequence is that one finds a scientific engineer, who has just completed some large iron bridge, sent to design and build a church because he must be kept on, and there is nothing else available; an engineer of mechanical skill is set to work on accounts because, although there is no mechanical work for him to do, he must be kept on; a high art architect, who has just finished a law court, or a palace, is sent to make mud embankments, and drive coolies; another, who has hitherto been employed in building barracks, is set to work out irrigation problems; and so on.

HILL STATIONS FOR YOUNG TROOPS.

The Pioneer holds that the more short service for the European garrison in India becomes the rule, the more necessary it is to arrange for the location of the young soldier in the hills during the hot weather. The subject has been urged for many years past upon the attention of the Government. The late Surgeon-General Beatson, who twice filled the post of principal medical officer of the imperial garrison, and who was an officer of great Indian experience, repeatedly pressed the subject on the authorities. Sir William Muir, the present head of the Army Medical Department, likewise has borne clear testimony to the importance of this question, and the truth of their warnings is from year to year corroborated by the heavy death statistics of the young soldiers in the plains. Each succeeding year we find that the young battalions arriving from England, and stationed in the hot plains, lose a heavy percentage of their young men from typhoid fever. Dr. Bryden, the statistical officer, plainly foretells that with the heats of May comes this most omeer, plainly foretens that with the neats of May comes this most fatal fever, and that the majority of the deaths take place before the clouding over of the June skies gives comparative coolness. Had he written by inspiration, he could hardly have been more correct than he has been in his prophecies, and we are told that the typhoid outbreak at Fyzabad followed this major power closely. followed this rule very closely. A young battalion fresh from England had not a case of typhoid until May, yet before the cloudy days in June came sixteen or seventeen cases had occurred with fifty per cent. of deaths. Of course no one will limit the cause of this fever only to heat, but that heat is a most important factor in the Indian typhoid few people now deny. However, leaving the question of cause to be discussed hereafter, one fact clearly remains, that in the plains the young soldier succumbs to typhoid, while in the mountains he is quite safe. Let us hold fast by this fact and utilise it to the fullest. Can nothing be done, then, to give quarters in the hills to the young soldier? Can we do nothing towards placing him in those splendid climates where, instead of dying as he does in the plains, he becomes a fine healthy young man? Is it of more importance to use up all our available hill sites in endeavouring to patch up the shaken constitution of the old soldier, who would be better in England, than to turn some of them into nurseries for the young lads arriving in the country, and who have at once to begin their hard fight with typhoid and heat in the plains? Is it essential that besides the convalescent hill depots, of which we do not now speak, Ranikhet, Chakrata, Dagshai, Sabathoo, and the Murree hills are to be kept for regiments well inured to the Indian climate, while crowds of lads, wholly immature, are fighting disease in the plains? The system that now obtains of sending some young recruits to fill up the vacancies in the convalescent depots is not desirable. In the depots sick duty is very mild, and contact with the sickly and used-up old soldier is not a good thing for the recruit. What is wanted seems to be a hill depot battalion of the young men, conducted on strict soldierly routine, with ample drill and field exercise, and all the discipline of a cold-weather life in the plains. Send the sick to the convalescent depot, but keep the young duty-soldier at his duty in a specially chosen hill station. Ranikhet, with its open spaces, would do well for such a purpose, and we hope before another hot season comes round something will be done towards this object either at Ranikhet or elsewhere. Twenty years ago we had a European garrison one-third the present strength; we had few drafts, and always long-service soldiers. To-day we have a large short-service garrison, and we must make changes to meet the altered condition of affairs. A hill depot battalion, organised on the footing of the depot battalions that existed until Lord Cardwell's time in England, would fulfil every requirement, and contribute much to the health and well-being of the shortservice soldier.

Some olive plants, sent out from Marseilles ten years ago, have flourished most remarkably in the Punjab, though no attention has been paid to them.

JURIES IN INDIA.

After hearing the case of Regina v. Kelly, Mr. Justice Turner addressed the jury as they were about to leave the box. The following passages of his speech are here given:—

"I am glad to be able to assure you that these remarks are not suggested by anything which has occurred in the course of the inquiry in which you have been for some days engaged. The case presented to you rested on testimony in which there were discrepancies on material points, and an able judge would have found some difficulty in arriving at the truth. You will therefore not doubt my sincerity in assuring you that the country is indebted to you for your services. But a recent failure of justice that occurred in this court following too many other instances of the same nature convinces me that it is my duty to declare in no uncertain terms what are the responsibilities of jurors, and what will be the inevitable result if jurors show themselves insensible of their responsibilities or incompetent to discharge their duty.

"The charges which jurors are called upon to try in this Court are brought against European British subjects, and rest ordinarily on the evidence of native witnesses. Some persons not immediately concerned in the administration of justice explain the failures of function to which I have alluded by the patient of the offender. concerned in the administration of justice explain the failures of justice to which I have alluded by the nationality of the offender. They do not hesitate to assert that had a native of this country stood in the same jeopardy as the European, he would have been condemned. They allege that there is not only a want of sympathy between the European and the native, which prevents the one from receiving at the hands of the other the equal consideration to which our laws entitle him, but that there exists also an antipathy of race which incornecities the European from doing justice in gases in which which incapacities the European from doing justice in cases in which a native is the accuser and an European the accused. Although I do not share these views, yet on more than one occasion I have found it difficult to discover any other explanation of the verdict of the jury. Twenty years have not elapsed since these provinces were visited by a calamity calculated beyond all others to provoke antipathies of race, and in some minds, then smitten with a life-long sorrow, most unchristian animosity may still paralyse the sense of justice. To some such condition of mind, deplorable as is the explanation, I would fain attribute an assertion reported to have been made by one who recently served as a juvor in this court. Being made by one who recently served as a juror in time court, asked to explain the verdict he had given, he admitted, as a matter which reflected credit on him, that he had not done his duty, and added that in certain circumstances he never would do it. I am sure that the person who made that assertion was unaware of all it involved-injustice to his fellow men, the violation of a solemn oath, the betrayal of a sacred trust.

"Should a man be called upon to serve as a juror who is conscious of any such sentiments as found expression in the assertion to which I have alluded, or even be apprehensive that his judgment might be warped by them, it is his duty to inform the Court (and he can do so privately), that he may be released from the false position in which he is placed—from the temptation to commit a very heinous crime.

"I have said that I do not accept the explanation which has been suggested to account for the many failures of justice which have occurred in this Court. I attribute by far the larger number of them to the inability of jurors to sift evidence, and to discern what should be accepted and what rejected. Discrepancies are often rather guarantees that the witnesses are speaking at least what they believe to be true.

"The observation of all persons is not equally minute; their memories are not equally retentive. Hardly any two persons would give precisely the same account of an occurrence unless they had agreed upon their statements. Yet when discrepancies occur in the evidence presented to them, jurors are apt to reject the whole of it, without endeavouring to discover whether any portion of it is true. They make no allowances for inaccuracies of observation or memory; they adopt the very misleading maxim, that being mistaken in one particular the witness is mistaken in all; they do not test what a witness thinks he saw or heard by what he did; they over-look a very common habit of uneducated witnesses to prefer to invent an answer rather than to confess a want of memory of detail, and to persist in an erroneous assertion once made rather than admit

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, (Aug. 8).—There is a service of chuprassies linking the Viceroy with the shooting-box, and Narkunda, though four marches out by the book, is only two days off if relays of ponies are ready—provided the road continues in existence that is. This is really, what hot seasons are sometimes inaccurately said to be, very melting weather. Roads have a playful trick of subsiding unexpectedly into valleys, and with the sudden torrents loosening their roots, the trees above on steep mountain sides grow as lively sometimes as though Amphion were fiddling. You can't walk along the tonga road any evening without finding that some tall deodar has "plucked his one foot from the grave" and precipitated himself across your path. So the hills may perhaps get shuffled in an unexpected way and bar out the illustrious Narkundians before next Friday. By-the-bye, the journey The Goverout was not accomplished entirely without catastrophe. The Governor-General's pony shied with him over the khud. Don't be alarmed he did not go over far, as the khud happened just there to be less perpendicular than it is in most places; but on such conditions does existence depend in this happy-go-lucky planet. Khuds will continue no doubt to exact their annual sacrifices as long as Anglo-Indians pass their summers in the hills. This year there have been no fatal, though several serious accidents. Broken bones of serious accidents. are under treatment now in more than one Simla household, in conare under treatment now in more than one Simla household, in consequence of falls from which, in some cases, the sufferers have been lucky in escaping with only broken bones. Indeed one cannot but be thankful at every time for having a complete set of unbroken bones. The odds seem so heavily against getting through life all in one piece. A visit to the Simla rink is the source of this solemn reflection. There you may see a dozen fellow-creatures on castors, contused, perhaps, but collected, who in defiance of the proverb about the pitcher and the well, have gone many times to the rink without even breaking a nose. "Hard, hard, hard is it only not to tumble," as Tennyson says of writing hendecasyllabics, and the skaters going about, each gravely intent hendecasyllabics, and the skaters going about, each gravely intent on his own affairs, seem possessed with a holy joy too great for ordinary merriment in merely remaining upright. There were ordinary merriment in merely remaining upright. There were occasional alliances contracted among them, now and then two ladies occasional alliances contracted among them, now and then two ladies taking hands across as in country dances, and gliding off together, but for the most part each performer flittered about separately, pering no attention to the rest, in a dreamy way suggestive of unrest rather than of activity, of aimless movement like that of the shades in Hades or of—what was it they put me in mind of? I felt that there was a vivid analogy between that group of accomplished rinkers and some other phenomenon, and for a time I could not fasten on the true idea. But as I watched them, retreating and advancing in their ghostly dance, gravely sliding out of one another's way, but in their constant passing and repassing regarding one another way, but in their constant passing and repassing regarding one another merely as obstacles to be avoided, my clouded simile suddenly cleared up, and I remembered the great den of leopards at the Zoological Gardens. The manner in which these beautiful creatures move necessarily in a narrow space, lifting an abstracted face out of the way of a companion's tail, going perpetually backwards and forwards and in and out, without taking any notice of each other, and entirely without any purpose in view that a spectator can fathom, is rinking to the life. Perhaps rinking with a band, and a crowd, and a gaily decorated salle, and the eternal possibilities of new flirtation, would suggest quite different fancies; but at Simla our rink, as I once mentioned before, is—not to put too fine a point upon it—an old racquet court, and it is impossible to regard the architectural features of a racquet court as conducive in themselves to cheerfulness. As ssociated with racquets, well and good, but to spend a happy day in it without playing the game, a racquet court is not the place any one would choose—nor for the sake of the view. The most faithful would choose—nor for the sake of the view. The most faithful devotees of the Simla rink, therefore, regard it chiefly as a place to devotees of the Simla rink, therefore, regard it chiefly as a place to practice in, or at least excuse their frequent attendance on that ground. None the less indeed did one lady, while I was there, consult her husband's watch, and finding she had time for "a quarter of an hour more," slide off into her orbit again, commingling with her mysterious companions, silent and strange in their solemnity as Rip Van Winkle's skittle players. A quarter of an hour more of what, I vaguely wondered. How can you measure off a yard of nothing? So I departed, while, as in the Dream of Fair Women, the lady who had spoken "thridded the sombre boscage of the rink," though without any such definite destination in view as the Morning the say without any such definite destination in view as the Morning Star. But after all that heavenly body itself goes wandering about the solar system in the same shiftless way, if you come to think of it. All the sky is a rink, and all the stars and planets only rinkers.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

SPECIAL APPEALS .- Sir R. Garth is said to have written a very strong minute against Mr. Hobhouse's Bill to amend the law of appeals, and to have recommended the establishment of appeal benches, composed of one civilian, one barrister, and one native.

A DISAGREEABLE SURPRISE.—A native lady of high rank, the aunt of Sirdar Ajith Singh Attareewallee of Amritsar, has met with a misfortune. It appears this lady some three years ago buried a large quantity of jewels. A few days ago, wishing to deck herself in some of these ornaments, she had the place dug up, when lo!

the ornaments had disappeared.

Forests.—The Forest Department have entered into an engagement with the Maharajah of Kashmir, who, on payment of Rs. 6,000 yearly, will be entitled to all the waif timber caught on the Jhilam river. A portion of the timber is British and a portion Kashmir, and hence there is always a dispute regarding the waif. This arrangement, we are told, is entered into simply to put an end to these disputes.

COLONEL MALLESON.—Colonel Malleson, the ex-guardian of the young Maharajah of Mysor, is now in Calcutta, engaged on a New History of that Province, which is expected to be out by the commencement of next year.

SIR SEYMOUR BLANE.—Colonel Sir Seymour Blane, C.B., at present on half-pay, has applied to be restored to the effective list, an arrangement for which there is ample precedent. We understand further that he is desirous of obtaining the first vacant majority in a European infantry regiment in India.—Times of India.

ACCIDENT TO MAJOR WATERFIELD.—We regret to hear that Major Waterfield, the Deputy Commissioner of Hazara, has met with a severe accident by a fall from his horse when riding to Nuthia Gully, and has been severely hurt.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 17.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE.—Among his friends at home Sir Richard Temple's resignation of his Lieutenant-Governorship next spring is accepted as a settled thing. The popular impression notwithstanding, and however good his chance, the Hon. Ashley Eden has not, we are assured, "got the appointment in his pocket."—Pioneer, Aug. 19.

CABUL NEWS.—The Ameer has imprisoned Mirza Jaffir, the Choongee or Octroi tax collector of Cabul, together with his wives and children, and confiscated all his property. As the Mirza is the brother of Sirda Sufder Ali Khan, the present Governor of Candahar, it is just possible that some political trouble may arise out of this unfortunate business.

PATIALA.—Mr. Lepel Griffin, Secretary to the Punjab Government, met the Rajas of Jhind and Nabha at Patiala on Sunday, August 13, and on Monday declared in darbar the form of Government to be adopted for the State during the Maharajah's minority, which consisted of a regency of three natives, two Sikhs, and one Mohammedan.

CHOLERA AT MURREE.—We much regret to note two other cases of cholers which have proved fatal. A European soldier died in the Fort, and a child at the Railway Station premises. It appears to be utterly useless to press the urgent necessity for sanitary improvements upon the notice of the local authorities, still we do not despair of being heard yet, and of causing some good to be effected in this respect.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 17.

An English Jogi.—At Simla, says the Bhaskur News of the 31st July, a young European gentleman has forsaken the religion of his forefathers, and become a devotee in accordance with the rites of Hinduism. He is now living in the house of a Brahmin, who has become his moral preceptor, with a view to bring him up as a regular jogi or devotee before he sets out on his intended pilgrimage to the shrines of the different Hindu deities.

CAPTAINS BIDDULPH AND GRANT.—A correspondent at Lolab, Kashmir, writing on the 4th Aug. says, that he cannot discover any foundation for the rumour that Captains Biddulph and Grant had been assassinated in Gilghit. They were both alive when heard of a short time ago, but Captain Grant was suffering from fever, and they were hurrying down towards Kashmir. Dr. Warren, of the 15th Hussars, has gone up to meet them and to render assistance. —Pioneer.

THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF INDIA.—The Athenœum tells us that Mr. John Dacosta, late senior partner in the firm of Ashburner and Co., of Calcutta, is about to publish a pamphlet on the financial condition of India, especially addressed to Indian bondbolders and other persons interested in the subject. A preface, recommending the pamphlet to the consideration of the public, will bear the signatures of Sir George Campbell, Sir Charles Wingfield, and other Indian authorities.—Engsishman, Aug. 16.

THE URAKZAIS AND THE AFRIDIS.—A correspondent, who should be well-informed, sends us details about some hard fighting that has taken place between the Urakzais and the Afridis. The portion of the Urakzai that were engaged were the Aleezai, alias Sturikheyl, who hold Barki and the Valley of the Baru; they only number 800, are splendid fellows, and very hospitable. They were attacked by the Akakheyl Afridis who number about 2,500 fighting men, but succeeded in beating them off, as they have frequently done before. If it be true that the Dowlatzai (also Urakzai) hostages have vanished, Usman Khan will have some difficulty in getting them to return. The policy of using the Urakzais as a check on the Afridis was recommended years ago, but is now, it would seem, being tried for the first time. The former offered us a sanitarium on the Molaghar in 1872, and if we had taken it, perhaps, the Kohat Pass might never have been closed.—Pioneer, Aug. 23.

THE QUEEN'S INDIAN TITLE.—A Gazette Extraordinary was issued at Simla on the 18th, in which Lord Lytton's proclamation of the new title, the Titles Bill and the Queen's proclamation were published. We have already published the above-mentioned documents. The following letter, dated the India-office, 13th July, is now published for the first time:—From her Majesty's Secretary of State for India. To the Government of India. I forward herewith, for the information of your Excellency's Government, copy of the Queen's Procianotifying the assumption by her Majesty of the title of Empress of Ladia." This act on the part of her Majesty is a formal and emphatic expression, for which it seemed to the Queen that the opportunity was eminently suitable, of the favourable sentiments which she has always entertained towards the princes and people of India. I request that your Excellency will proclaim throughout her Majesty's Indian dominions, in a manner suitable to her gracious intentions, the addition which has been made to the Royal Style and Titles.

The Rainfall in the Himalayas.—We do not suppose that there has ever been a year which can record a heavier rainfall in the Himalayas than the present one. The roads are everywhere abimes. We hear from Camp Jalla that even the coolies refuse to cross them. Mr. Wilson, who had lived thirty years in those parts, had pitched his tent ten miles off at Dungulli, and was nearly swept away. A little stream became a torrent in a few minutes and carried all before it. Mr. Wilson could only save his life with the greatest difficulty. A few wood-cutters left Bhutwari a few days ago for Jhalla, and after they had been two miles on the road, a huge stone, loosened by the rains, fell down, killing one man and breaking the leg of another. A young officer who wanted to visit the Kulu valley by the Vylang Pass was literally compelled to return, in consequence of the impassable road, the rain and the cold. At Nyni Khad, on the road to Dalhousie, a Kahar was swept away the other day, and altogether we fear that the list of casualties in "the Hills" is greater this year than usual.—Indian Public Opinion.

A Horrible Execution at Darjeling.—A very disgraceful scene to all concerned was lately enacted in Darjeling. The murderer, who was rightly sentenced to expiate his crime by being "hanged by the neck until he was dead," was hanged indeed, but, owing to some bungling on the first attempt, the rope broke, and the body fell to the ground half strangled, to be again strung up, with another rope this time, and finally despatched. The law very properly punishes murder by death, and, we fancy, amongst the large crowd of natives assembled to witness the execution not one individual sympathised with the culprit; but, we take it, the law of the country does not include torture in the extreme sentence of the law, and especially not torture inflicted before a crowd of natives, as certainly was the case in this instance. We have ourselves a constitutional horror of witnessing executions, and did not go to see the sentence of the law carried out; but we have been informed by reliable eye-witnesses that, when the unfortunate culprit fell to the ground, on the breaking of the first rope, he writhed about for some minutes until the second one was fixed, and the already half-strangled body was again attached to the gallows for its final launch into eternity. We do not yet know what effect such a terrible scene has had on the native mind, always ready to put the worst possible construction on the acts of Europeans; but we do know that such a scene, if enacted in England, would have resulted in the hangman being mobbed, and we do also know that, whoever is responsible for European justice being turned into a scene of horrible torture, ought to be, and we hope is, thoroughly ashamed of himself.—Darjecting News.

THE EXHIBITION OF COCOONS.—From a report by Mr. Halsey on the recent exhibition of cocoons at Gurdaspur, it would appear that silk-worm rearing has increased much in the district, and especially amongst the impoverished villages on the canal banks near Pathankot. Now that the business has made such a good start, there is every prospect of its increasing. The Local Committee intend to give prizes next year for the best cocoons, and will make the terms more favourable for zemindars. At the recent exhibition there were 98 exhibitors, bringing cocoons from Nurpore, in the Kangra district in one direction, and from Majitha, in the Umritsur district, in the other, and from Narot, across the Ravi to Nowshera, on the banks of other, and from Narot, across the Kavi to Nowshera, on the banks of the Beas. The cocoons exhibited were generally good, showing a great improvement over former seasons; but the exhibitors showed a want of knowledge of their subject in bringing their samples in an unmarketable form. For instance, many samples contained white, deep yellow, light yellow, green and double cocoons; and as the breeders keep the seed [eggs] of these mixed colours and descriptions from year to year, the confusion becomes greater and greater to The great objection to this arrangement is the difficulty in giving the value of the cocoons, and the expense attending the sorting before they can be reeled The exhibitors were of all classes, including the professional silk-worm rearers, confined to Sheikh Jaffir of Kotnaina and his offshoots and connections, other Cashmerees, Punjabees, Mussulmans, Brahmins, Rajpoots, Kathrees, and other Hindoos. Among these last the greater number were zemindars, and there is little doubt but that the art of silk-worm rearing will derive considerable impetus among this class, as three of the zemindar exhibitors carried off prizes of Rs. 100, Rs. 50, and Rs. 30 respectively. -Calcutta Statesman.

THE ACCIDENT TO LORD LYTTON.—The Viceroy's trip to Narkunda was not very successful as affording him views of Himalayan scenery. I am told that it poured incessantly the whole time, and the travellers never got a glimpse of the snows, or indeed of anything but the tails of the ponies in front of them on the road. They remained a day longer than they intented at Narkunda to give the weather a chance, but it only rained all the harder. Going out his Excellency followed the lower road from Mushobra to Mahassu Bungalow. This had partially fallen into disrepair, but a very little work carried out in anticipation of the Viceroy's journey put it to None the less was it the scene of an accident, which rights again. might have been a very terrible one. Most narrow escapes get a good deal exaggerated at first, and turn out in the end to have been less alarming than excited imaginations originally painted them. Especially is this the case, as a rule, when the risks averted have befallen distinguished people. But Lord Lytton's slip over the khud, to which, I think, I just alluded in my last letter, was really a more serious fall than first accounts will have led you to suppose. were urgent reasons at the time for making light of it, but these are all happily over now. The fact was that his Lordship's horse shied at some workmen at a narrow part of the road between Mushobra and Mahassu, and went over the side, Lord Lytton falling—fortunately—clear of his horse, but fully a hundred feet down, before he was stopped by a tree. The khud was not absolutely a precipice just at this point, as it is for a great part of the way, or such an accident could only have had one termination. But the whole incident is described by those who saw it as a frightful sight, and his Lordship's escape as almost miraculous. He did escape, however, without a scratch, was able to scramble up, mount another horse, and continue his ride to Theog, as if nothing had happened. The horse, too, was nearly unhurt, though the workmen had to cut him a road before he could be got up again.—Simla Correspondent of Pioneer.

INDIAN-MADE CLOTHS .- Several wealthy natives of Bangalor have among themselves subscribed Rs. 20,000 for the sole purpose of encouraging the sale of Indian made cloths, and have for this purpose opened a shop in the heart of the pettah, where a great variety of the country made stuff is exposed for sale.

DACOITY REPRESSED.—Mr. Porter, Superintendent of Police, Shwe-gyeen District, has been very successful in working up some difficult dacoity cases. The result of his energetic and intelligent work is that a number of robbers and murderers have been brought to justice.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE NIZAM.—A rumour is being circulated among the Mussulman population at Bangalor to the effect that all those who desire to be present at the approaching marriage of the Nizam will be paid Rs. 500 to defray expenses, and already several are preparing themselves to start!—Bangalor Spectator.

Dr. Balfour.—We hear that a farewell address is to be presented to Dr. Balfour by the members of the European, Hindu, and Mohammedan communities, previous to his departure from Madras, in which Presidency he served for fully forty years. The address will be adopted at a public meeting, which will be held in due course.— Pioneer

THE NEW RAILWAY FROM RANGOON.—Rails have been laid down from Thongzai towards Rangoon for three miles. The laying down began last April, so it has taken more than three months to lay them, and that using only half the number of sleepers usually allotted to each rail. The new bridges are still unfinished. By the end of August it is expected the line from Rangoon to Thongzai will be ready and the engine run up, at least orders to this effect have been issued. We trust it will be done, and done properly, or it will have to be done over again.

A PROFITABLE POST.—The appointment of Administrator-General, from what we can judge of it in the Madras Presidency, seems to be highly remunerative, says a Nilgiri paper. Mr. Miller, the present incumbent, claimed as his commission on a single estate, the sum of Rs. 35,000. Supposing it took Mr. Miller three years to close the estate, his remuneration would have been at the rate of a thousand rupees a month-a great deal more than an Assistant Commissioner draws, with a multiplicity of judicial and revenue business to attend We can therefore well imagine why the appointment is so much coveted, and why there was so much heart-burning when Mr. Miller assumed the position of "successful candidate."

TOBACCO IN BURMAH.—We learn from the Rangoon Gazette that Dr. Brown, Superintendent of the Model Farms in Tirhoot, deputed by the Government of India to visit Burmah and ascertain whether any improvement can be effected in tobacco cultivation. finds that it is in the curing the Burmese fail, the process in vogue being of the crudest character, except in the Kyoukee and Yonz leen Districts, where the leaf seems to be better prepared. Dr. Brown is said to be an advocate for the importation of Chinese labour, which would be a decided improvement for agriculturists. Celestials cannot be excelled for the care bestowed by them upon produce of every kind, whether while growing or in their preparation for the market.

SUICIDE.—An assistant apothecary on the Madras Medical Establishment named Charles Benjamin Connolly committed suicide on Monday last by swallowing a quantity of hydrocyanic acid. The deceased, it appears, had been found fault with in the General Hospital, and when he was informed that his conduct was reported to the higher authorities he drove down to the Thieving Bazaar and bought an ounce of the deadly poison. He next went to his house and, after a short conversation with his family, swallowed the acid. He was taken to the General Hospital at once, and the doctors attended to him there. A few hours for his admirant he did and the circumstance of the statement of the stat him there. A few hours after his admission he died, and the circumstance was reported to the coroner. An inquest having been held the following day, the jury in their verdict found that deceased committed suicide while in a state of temporary insanity.-Madras Athenœum, Aug. 16.

HARBOUR DEFENCE AT RANGOON.—The Rangoon Gazette says that "Captain Newmarch, R.E., Executive Engineer, Prome Division, on being relieved by Mr. Macrone, is to proceed to Rangoon, and will be employed in surveying the principal ports of the Province, for the purpose of establishing au efficient system of harbour defences. The plan likely to be adopted is that recommended by Colonel Oliphant, late Chief Engineer of this Province, to which we referred in a former issue. We should not be surprised if, in addition to batteries at Monkey Point, and other places in its neighbourhood, a few powerful guns were placed on the hill occupied by the European regiment. The range is not too great. One great advantage of a battery in such a position is that the gunners not employed in the Monkey Point battery would not be condemned to enforced idleness while an enemy's iron-clad was trying to force its way up the river.

THE 37TH GRENADIERS.—This Regiment of Native Infantry, now in Vepery, is under orders for removal next season to Palan cottah. On account of its services in China, during the Expedition of 1841-42, the regiment has been honoured with the designation of "Grenadiers," and it may be regarded as one of the crack corps of the Madras Army. In connection with the China war a painful incident is associated with the history of this regiment, which will long stand prominently forward in the annals of this Presidency. We refer to the fate of the good ship Golconda, while conveying the head-quarters of this gallant corps to the seat of war, was never again heard of, it being, with good reason, supposed that the ship foundered with all on heard whilst, encountering a typhoon in the foundered with all on board whilst encountering a typhoon in the China sea. The colonel, majors, doctors, and a couple of subatterns of the regiment perished on the occasion. The late tragic death of Colonel Macaulay at Bangalor will, no doubt, for some time add not a little to the interest felt in this distinguished regiment.—Madras Mail, Aug. 15.

THE LATE MR. PATRICK HARRY GORDON.—The home papers have kindly noticed the death of Mr. Gordon, late editor of this newspaper. Those acquainted with him previously to his leaving Madras will receive the announcement without surprise. He was almost in a dying state when he started. His early death is a matter, however, of some wonder to those who seek to preserve health by obeying some strict regime of diet and habit—for he was a prodigy of energy, mental and physical. Few men, we think, have written so much in the time as Mr. Gordon did when he was well, while he was quite as much at home in the saddle as in the office chair. Though not obstinately self-opinionated, the Athenæum was directed by him in every detail, and no influence had any effect upon him if he saw that it was used merely to suit the personal interests of any one. We mention this as a fact because opinions to the contrary have been expressed. Considering the amount of work he got through and the physical exercise he took, we must pronounce him as abstemious at table. Had he been the opposite of what he was, we could have accounted for the severe attack of liver which carried him away. And again, his personal strength seems only to have given strength to the disease. His sufferings were intense until just before the mail of the 14th left, when the fatal state of being "much easier" was reported.—Madras Athenœum.

ARRIVAL OF SIR SALAR JUNG.

Yesterday his Excellency Sir Salar Jung, c c.s.i., the Minister of his Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad, arrived in Bombay harbour in the P. and O. Company's steamer Pera. One of the first to go on board to welcome his Excellency was Major Proudfoot, his Military Secretary, who had come from Hyderabad to meet Sir Salar. A few others from Hyderabad also went on board to welcome their master on his return from England. Amongst his suite was particularly noticeable the richly clad Syed Abdool. Sir Salar Jung, though apparently in the best of health, is still a cripple, and the well-known form which so softly glided amongst those around it, chatting with this one and that one, sat yesterday quietly on the deck seats, giving instructions to the servants as they knelt to him on the poop. The Pera had enjoyed unusually fine weather, and as the main deck had been placed entirely at the disposal of the distinguished travellers, Sir Salar voyaged most comfortably. Before leaving the vessel he signalled his satisfaction with all the arrangements by handsome presents to each member of the gray. Contain Hyde regards a prest reliable dis member of the crew. Captain Hyde received a most valuable diamond ring; the chief officer and chief engineer other diamond rings; the junior officers trinkets of some value; the petty officers two or three pounds each; the stokers half-a-sovereign; and each of the crew five shillings. When the time arrived for his Excelof the crew five shillings. lency to land he was assisted to the accommodation ladder by Captain Hyde, of the Pera, Sir Salar's brother (Yavor Ali Khan) and nephew helping him into the steam launch which was awaiting his convenience. Here he was received by Captain Campbell, of the Bombay Marine, who conducted his Excellency to his seat. Sir Salar Jung was accompanied by Mr. Arthur Craigie Oliphant, his private Sung was accompanied by Mr. Arthur Gragie Offman, his private secretary, and Mr. Oliphant, by the Nawab Scoleyman Yar Jung Bahadoor, Jemadar Muccadum, Siddi Amber, Mir Regazit Ali, Syed Hoosein, Yassum Ali, Ghaleb Jung, Mufullum Jung, Syed Ali Khan, Meer Tahawor Khan, and Azim Ali Khan, and several other Hyderabad officials. Surgeon-Major Williamson, others of the suite, and the rest of the retinue, including thirty-seven servants, followed in other boats. On leaving the ship's side the yards were manned and both passengers and crew gave the party "three times three" and waved hats, scarves, and handkerchiefs, which were duly acknowledged, and in a few minutes the boom of the first of seventeen guns announced that the Nizam's representative had once again placed his foot upon Indian soil. On arriving at the Bunder Sir Salar Jung disembarked from the steam launch, and ascended the steps leaning on the arm of Captain Trevor. He was dressed as usual, in a dark-blue uniform with a gold belt round his waist, and his customary white turban on his head. After shaking hands and conversing for a few minutes with those who were present, his Excellency got into his carriage and drove off to the house of his Bombay agent, Mr. Muncherjee Bomanjee Punthakee. As soon as the mail steamer had been signalled people began to assemble at the Apollo Bunder, and amongst those who were present to welcome his Excellency were Mr. Mackenzie, the Acting Under-Secretary to the Judicial Department, Mr. Venayek Wassodew, the Oriental Translator to the Government, Captain Robinson, Captain Searle, Mr. Pedder, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hamilton Maxwell, Mr. G. Geary, the Hon. Mahomed Ally Rogay, Dustoor Khan Pestonjee, whose brother is one of the chief Talookdars in the employ of the Nizam, Mr. Cumroodeen Tyabjee, Mr. Manockjee Cursetjee, and others. A guard of honour, consisting of one hundred of the rank and file of the 20th N.I., under the command of Major Kettlewell, was drawn up to receive his Excellency, and with band playing escorted the party as far as the Esplanade.

Yesterday afternoon the members of the new Bombay Mohammedan Society, called the Unjumna Islam, waited on Sir Salar Jung, and presented him with an address congratulating him on his safe return to India. There were fifteen members in all present, including the president, Mr. Cumroodin Tyabjee, the vice-president, the Hon. Mahomed Ally Rogay, and the honorary secretary, Mr. Goolam Mahomed Moonshee. Mr. Moulvie Hidayat Ullah having read the address it was presented to his Excellency by the president. Sir Salar Jung in reply stated that he had received great honours in England, not only from the Government but also from the public. He had derived great benefit from what he had seen abroad, and the experience he had gained had only added to the desire he had always felt to civilise the natives of the country, and he was in hopes that his efforts in the future would show that he had profited by his experience. He returned his sincere thanks to the Society for their address and kind wishes; as he had not had time to write a reply to it, he had said it in as few words as possible.

As soon as his Excellency had concluded his reply, the members of the Society shook hands with him and took their departure.

The following Government resolution was issued yesterday afternon:—

His Becallency the Nawab Sir Salar Jung, c.c.s.r., will take his departure for Indexahad by special train, leaving the Byculla Station at 7 A.M., railway time, to morrow, the 25th instant.

- 2. His Excellency will be accompanied from his residence on the Queen's road to the Byculla Station by a deputation consisting of the Resident Under-Secretary and the Oriental Translator to Government.
- 3. A guard of honour will be in attendance at the Railway Station, and a salute of seventeen guns will be fired from the Saluting Battery on his Excellency's departure.—Times of India, Aug. 25.

STATION TALK.

Muscat, Aug. 3.—The universal topic of conversation is the weather, which has been exceedingly trying this season. Several cases of heat apoplexy have occurred amongst the Banian community, but happily none have been fatal. During the past week, however, the mercury has indicated an improvement, and we are hopeful the worst of the heat has been experienced. The monsoon on the north-east coast of Arabia has been very heavy. The s.s. Koina put in here in distress on the 31st ult. with the loss of her jibboom, figure-head, and topmast. She is shattered above watermark, and is much damaged. She has had a lucky escape, the ship-masters consider, from sharing the fate of the ill-starred Coromandel. The Arab, R.N., from Kurrachee, Captain Broughton, arrived on the 28th, and will probably remain in and about Muscat for some little time. The Merchantman, from Calcutta, vid Port Natal, and the Marchioness of Londonderry, Captain Lucas, from the same port, via the Mauritius, are amongst the arrivals. The Kingdom of Oman is at peace. The date harvest, an exceedingly prolific one, is keeping the restless sons of the desert so fully employed as to leave them no time for intrigue. There have, however, been a few brushes between the rival factions of the Hinawies and Ghafries, but these, being as common as street fights in civilised countries, are counted of no moment. His Highness the Sultan is on a summer visit to the seaport fortress of Burkah. He has lately deported three of his nephews on a charge of being hostile to his Government and feeding discontent among his subjects. These young men are the sons of the late Seyud Thoweynee, whose memory is still revered amongst the Arabs as that of a wise, just, and able ruler. By the parricidal act of their half-brother, Syud Salim, now a State prisoner in Sind, these young men were hurled from a position of affluence to the very depths of poverty. His Highness the Sultan never attempted to ameliorate their condition beyond allowing them the merest pittance for subsistence; nevertheless it is the general opinion that the charge against them, one and all, is untenable. - Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF LIEUT. HOBART.—We regret to announce the death in Bombay of Lieut. and Adjutant Hobart, H.M.'s 66th Regiment.—Deccan Herald, Aug. 18.

SUICIDE BY A SOLDIER.—Private John Cave, of her Majesty's 66th Regiment, stationed at the Ghorepoorie barracks, committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself with his own rifle. An inquest was held by the Cantonment Police at the Ghorepoorie Barracks on the deceased, and the verdict given was that the deceased committed suicide by shooting himself with a rifle in a fit of temporary insanity. It is said the man had been indulging in liquor pretty freely.—Puna Observer, Aug. 12.

ACCIDENT TO MR. SPIERS.— Mr. W. Spiers, the Sub-Regisrart Havilee, lately had to have his leg amputated in consequence of a serious accident, sustained by the upsetting of the carriage in which he was seated, over a heap of stones, which had negligently been left on the road by the City Municipality. Mr. W. Spiers filed a suit against the Municipality for forty thousand rupees. This case was heard last month by H. W. Newnham, Esq., Judge of Puna, and the judgment delivered on August 24 awarded the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 15,000 with costs.

THE DEATH OF MRS. CRUICKSHANK.—A correspondent at Ah' medabad writes to us of the death by cholera of Mrs. Cruickshank. The melancholy event has cast quite a gloom over the station, and put a stop to the gaieties which were about to take place. Telegrams have been sent intimating to those invited that the gaieties have been postponed. Mrs. Cruickshank was quite well, and was playing at Badminton, as usual, the evening before the morning on which she was seized with cholera. In the midst of life we are in death.—Deccan Herald, Aug. 23.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF BOMBAY.—His Excellency Sir Charles Staveley, K.C.B., will leave Poona to-morrow morning on a tour of inspection to Seroor and Agmednuggur. His Excellency will be accompanied by his staff, by the Adjutant and the Assistant Adjutant General of the army, by the Quarter Master General, and Major Justice, Military Secretary. His Excellency will inspect the Poona Horse at Seroor on Thursday and go on in the evening to Ahmednuggur. His Excellency is expected back in Poona on Monday morning.—Deccan Herald, Aug. 23.

CIVIL.—The following notification was issued on Friday in a Government Gazette Extraordinary:—His Excellency the Honourable the Governor of Bombay has been pleased, in accordance with the provisions of Section 29 of "The Indian Councils Act, 1861," to nominate the following gentlemen to be additional Members of his Excellenge's Council for the additional Members of his Excellency's Council for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations only:—The Hon. Major-General Michael Kavanagh Kennedy; the Hon. Rao Saheb Vishwanath Narayan Mandlik; the Hon. Nacoda Mahomed Ali Rogay; the Hon. Donald Graham; Sorabji Sapurji Bengali, Esq.—Times of India, Aug. 25.

Belgaum, says: -The station has had quite a gloom cast over it, by the departure for Aden of Colonel and Mrs. Faulknor. Colonel Faulknor was the popular commandant of the Prince of Wales's Grenadiers, and being lately transferred to command his former regiment, the 6th N.I., on its becoming vacant, proceeded to Aden, where he will also command the Brigade until General Schnieder returns. I believe I may say few have carried away with them so many regrets and good wishes. Their genial kindness seems to have endeared them to all, and the undeviating justice, tempered with mercy, shown by Colonel Faulknor to the natives under his command, made him, though a stranger to the Grenadiers when he joined, much beloved by both men and native officers. He belongs to the old type of "Indian Officer," of which few remain; "and the pity of it." A genial companion, a firm friend, and the very soul of honour, he carries with him the good wishes of all.

THE SHIP "MONARCH."-The loss of the British ship Monarch is at last confirmed by a report from the Sir Carcoon to the Acting Collector of Salt Revenue, Bombay. He states that part of a jolly-boat has been washed ashore on the coast bearing the name of Monarch, London. After receiving the letter of the Master Attendant, requesting him to make inquiries, he visited the places from Bankoot in a southward direction to Clothur, about twentyfour miles down the coast, but he could not learn what the name of the ship was, and when she was lost, nor whether any of the crew had got ashore. Teak logs, planks, and joists have been found ashore between Bankoot and Clothur. Among these are sixty-seven large teak logs, which bear the marks of Messrs. Wallace and Co. They are in possession of police and Customs chowkey peons. Some of the wreck has been secured at the place where it was washed ashore. A Bhundari picked up a wooden box, which the police ashore. A Bhundari picked up a wooden box, which the poince seized and delivered to the police clerk, when it was broken open, but nothing of any value was found in it. The after part of a jolly-boat has been found, which bears the name of Monarch, London. Large teak logs have been washed ashore near Booroodi, Hurnee, Sivnay, Curandey, Anjerley, Kelsey, Moorood, Adey, Bankoot, Saldorey, and Ootumber.—Times of India, Aug. 25.

THE "INDIAN STATESMAN."—The compositors in the Indian Statesman office on Monday refused to work unless their arrears of four months' wages were paid to them. The official assignee and the manager of the Indian Statesman endeavoured to persuade them not to take a course which would cause the death of the paper, but the compositors were inexorable. They said they could not live and support their families for months without money. They insisted on their wages being paid down at once, which the official assignee, who is now in charge of the paper, could not do, as that would prejudice the other creditors of the paper. When the compositors grew firm and resolute in their determination, a contractor was sent for, who undertook to print the paper for a consideration. But he counted without his compositors. Before Damodhur Mullajee, the contractor, could bring the men on strike to terms, two of the Parsee compositors set upon and belaboured him with their fists. The contractor felt himself unable to cope with the difficulties of the situation, and consequently withdrew from the arrangement he had partially entered into. The assault on the contractor would have grown into a general skirmish but for the timely interference of the police. The police rescued the man, who yesterday applied to Mr. Nana Morojee for summonses against the assailants. The Statesman, of course, ceased to appear.—Times of India, Aug. 25.

JUDICIAL.—H.E. the Governor has been pleased to appoint John George Crow, Esq., to be a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Coroner for the district of Badulla, and John Milne, Esq., to be a Justice of the Peace for the Morwak Korle district. Mr. Atherton, at present Assistant Government Agent at Ratnapura, will shortly take up the appointment of District Judge at Batticaloa, vice Mr. Worthington, who goes on leave. Mr. Atherton will be succeeded at Ratnapura by Mr. A. R. Dawson, at present Assistant Government Agent at Kegalle.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.—(GALLE, Aug. 10.)—There are a great many changes to be made amongst the local civil servants in Ceylon. Mr. E. M. D. Byrde from landing surveyor becomes police magistrate of Galle, Mr. Mason reverting to his old place at the Customs. Mr. Lee will proceed to Kelture succeeding Mr. Patterner.—1. Mr. Lee will proceed to Kaltura, succeeding Mr. Patterson, who will take up the duties of deputy collector of customs, Colombo. Mr. W. E. T. Clarke, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, and Second Judge of the Appeal Court of Cochin, was a passenger to that port from Galle in the B.I. steamer Dacca. This gentleman is a special magistrate of the first class, and justice of the peace, and is authorised to try European British subjects committing offences in the State of Cochin.

THE BISHOP AND THE MISSIONARIES .- During the four days which have elapsed since our (Ceylon Observer) last issue, the state of affairs brought about by Bishop Copleston's interference with the Tamil Coolie Mission and the Church Missionaries has undergone no material change, the Bishop still maintaining his "rights" in the matter, while the Missionaries continue silenced. From the files of the Ceylon Observer, just received, we see that indignation meetings had been held in many places in the island, protesting strongly against the conduct of the Bishop in suspending the Missionaries, and several proposals for disestablishment were carried. The native catechists and converts all stand firm to the Mission-Another result pretty certain to follow from the Bishop's action is, we read, the cessation of all payments from the Treasury chest in aid of Episcopalianism, and, of course, Presbyterianism also. In reply to a letter from the secretary to the committee appointed to bring about this end, the authorities have stated that they are aware of no regulation which would hinder Government servants so disposed signing memorials for disestablishment, and, of course, property than taking part in a provement having that chieft course, prevent them taking part in a movement having that object in view. During the first canvass for signatures to the memorials, it was found that a large number of Government servants who agreed in the prayer considered themselves debaned from adhibiting their names. This difficulty is now removed.

FURLOUGH RULES.

The following letter received from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India is published for general information, and all previous orders on the subject referred to are cancelled :-

India-office, London, May 4, 1876.
To H.E. the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council. 1. Your letter, No. 16, dated Jan. 28, 1876, inquires how the Indian Furlough Regulations are to be held to apply to British officers holding staff appointments in India seconded in their regiments.

2. I consider that all British officers holding staff appointments in India necessitating their being seconded from regiments on the Indian Establishment, and officers appointed from regiments serving elsewhere than is in India, whether seconded or not, should be placed in the same position, and that such officers should be allowed, during their five years' tenure of office, six months' leave on sick certificate, with absentee allowances regulated under the Furlough Rules of 1888, or leave on private affairs for four months, with British pay from Indian revenues. Any leave obtained in excess of either of these periods will involve loss of appointment, and only one grant of leave out of India will be allowed.

3. This decision should be published in General Order, in substitution of all previous orders on the subject.—I have, &c., Salisbury.

The following military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India is published for general information:—

India-office, London, June 15, 1876.

To the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

Para. 1. Having had under my consideration in Council the subject of the rotes of pay drawn by officers of the Indian cadres of royal artillery while on leave in this country from brigades serving in India, I have decided to assimilate those rates to the rates drawn by officers of the old royal artillery, making an exception, however, in favour of certain general officers and of the lieut. cols. of foot artillery on the Indian cadres, the former of whom will receive pay according to Indian rates when those rates are more favourable to them, while the latter will, as heretofore, receive pay at £1 a day.

2. In the case of the adjutant of a brigade, being an officer of an Indian cadre, and on leave in this country, the same deduction must be made from the staff pay of the officer acting for him during such absence as is made from the pay of an officer officiating for an adjutant of the old Imperial list.

3. This change will take effect from April 1, 1876.—I have, &c.

These rates of furlough pay will also be issued in India, in substitution of those promulgated in G.G.O. No. 538 of 1872.

THE PERAK CAMPAIGNERS.

The Army and Navy Gazette remarks that the 1st Battalion of the Buffs and the Goorkhas have found many champions in India to plead their cause in the local press; but, hitherto, we have refrained from making any allusion to the subject of their grievance. It is almost unnecessary for us to point out what the grounds are for their complaint. The part the two corps played in the recent operations in Perak is well known, and the "Army Lists" show to what extent they have been rewarded. The Perak Expedition was not a popular war. Strictly speaking it was as important as that what extent they have been rewarded. The Perak Expedition was not a popular war. Strictly speaking, it was as important as that in which we were, a few years ago, engaged in Ashantee; but then no troop went out from England to take part in it, and the General who commanded, and the Staff Officers who assisted him, were drawn from distant dominions. As a consequence, we heard little of the fighting in Perak, whereas that in Ashantee was greatly ex-Under the circumstances, it is not surprising that the claims of the troops in Perak should appear to have been overlooked. The Goorkhas had one officer promoted, and also received a V.C. as their share of the rewards bestowed in connection with the war. As for the Buffs, though officers and men suffered from sickness to an extent which almost paralysed the regiment, and which cost it several lives, they got nothing whatever. This is not quite as it should be. The idea of a medal for the Perak campaign could not well be entertained, but other steps might be taken for marking the country's appreciation of the services performed. It is only natural there will be murmurings when, whilst brevets and unattached comthere will be murmurings when, whilst brevets and unattached companies are extended to a favoured few in the 10th and 80th Regiments, the Buffs and Goorkhas have passed, the latter almost, the former entirely, unrewarded. His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief is noted for his sense of justice, and we feel sure he would be one of the last to cast a slight upon two corps which have suffered such hardships as these two regiments have done. We may tell the officers and men of the Perak Expedition that to agitet for a medal is to seek for what they cannot obtain that to agitate for a medal is to seek for what they cannot obtain. The home authorities are sensible of the admirable manner in which the service was performed, but they feel that the time has come when we should prove to our neighbours that though we did suffer ourselves to overdo the Ashantee business, we have seen our error, and are in no humour to repeat the mistake. Still, the Buffs and Goorkhas are justified in looking for some recognition, and we trust that it may be considered how recognition can best be made. It is especially impolitic to ignore the Native regiment.

A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss [which cannot fail to fit] forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer.

Summary and Revielv.

Our latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, September 1; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, August 30; Calcutta, August 29.

THE news by the present mail has no political or special importance of any kind.

IT was reported by telegraph from Simla to Calcutta on August 24 that the Viceroy's health had much improved at that date.

A REVISED code has been published under the authority of the Government, embodying all orders relating to pay, pensions, and promotions in the military service of India. The partition of Estates Bill (Bengal) has been passed into law. The Government report on the Marine Department has, we (Times of India) hear, been referred to a special committee at the India Office.

The last news received at Calcutta of the movements of Capt. Grant was, that he had reached Kashmir, and that therefore the report of his murder on his way thither was unfounded.

ALLAHABAD news to August 21 notices Sir G. Couper's Circular regarding the financial crisis in Bengal. He anticipates considerable reduction in the provincial resources, and invokes the aid of the heads of Departments to meet it with extensive reduction in expenditure.

THE report was current that Sir R. Meade either goes to Rajputana or retires in a couple of months.

THE Chief Justice of the High Court, N.W. Provinces, has sent a strong minute to Government enforcing the views taken by the Court in Mr. Fuller's case.

A TELEGRAM from Simla, dated August 24, received by the Calcutta Englishman, communicated that the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Scott Vincent Fisher, Bengal Staff Corps, occurred on the 22nd August. The deceased officer was buried with military honours on the evening of the following day,

A TELEGRAM, dated Simla, August 25, received by the Englishman, states that the Court-Martial has honourably and fully acquitted Major Playfair, and that the Commander-in-Chief has confirmed the finding.

It is believed that Colonel J. I. Willes, the Commissary-General, Bengal, will leave the hills about the middle of October, intending, on his way down to the Presidency, to visit Delhi. As Delhi is within the Central Circle of the Commissariat, Colonel A. D. Dickens, c.B., Deputy Commissary-General of that Circle, is talked of as likely to be the Supervising Commissariat Officer of the Camp.

It has been reported that the Provost Sergeant of H M.'s 51st Regiment, stationed at Cherat, was shot on the night of Aug. 20, while on his rounds, by the Afridis, and died in two days. Shortly after the same party hacked up a policeman who was escorting a prisoner to Kohat.

THE new Warrant relating to the pay of European soldiers comes into operation in India in October. It will enhance the cost of the European army to no inconsiderable extent. This year, however (it is noticed by the Madrus Times) the effect will be partial, as the new pay will not be due for all the twelve months; but even for this year the additional expense to India will, it is believed, be something like £30,000. The money will not have to be paid immediately, because the benefit conferred on the soldier takes the form of deferred pay in the case of the privates; but in the long run it will have to be provided for, The delay in the issue of notifications on the subject here has been due to the retardation of the papers at home.

THE failure of the ice supply continues to be a matter of absorbing interest in Bombay. The subject has attracted the serious attention of the Ice Committee, and several meetings have been held.

THE Bombay papers contain accounts of cholera having broken out with great violence at Jummoo. The Maharajah of Cashmere has moved five miles from his capital, which is deserted by people, who are flocking to English territory. The disease seems most severe at Gujrat, Rawal Pindi, and Lahor.

THE Bombay papers are advised of the arrival at Jeypore of the Maharajah Partab Sing, of Jodhpore, accompanied by thirteen personal followers, en route to England, whither he is going, in acceptance of a special invite from H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE Art Exhibition at Poona has been a great success. The pictures are more numerous and of better quality than those exhibited last year. The oil paintings of Major Tanner and the water colours of Colonel Baigrie, Colonel Hancock and Major Pullan (prize takers) are more like the productions of the famous Old Water Colour Society of London than of amateurs, and would command a prominent position in any Art Exhibition. There are several charming sketches and finished paintings by lady amateurs, and we may look forward to many excellent exhibitions in future years in Poona. The Art Exhibition may now be considered as one of the principal institutions of Poona, and with so able and energetic a secretary as Major Ayrton Pullan to induce amateurs to contribute, we have little doubt that it will become famous all over India.

According to the Englishman, two statements, more or less different, of the measures sanctioned by the India Office for redressing the grievances of Indian civil servants, have been put forth; the one apparently from Simla, the other from Naini Tal. The differences between the two accounts are chiefly in details, and no one, it seems, can yet say which is the more correct. Both however appear to agree on certain points. One of these is the grant to civilians of twenty years' service and upwards, of a proportional share of the thousand a-year now claimable as pension after twenty-five years' service. It is further conceded that the amount of any such pension in excess of £500 a year may be capitalised. This plan has the double advantage of costing Government little, and of enabling many who wish to retire to do so on equitable terms. It appears that about forty men in the North-West Provinces will thus be placed in a position to retire, and about the same number in Lower Bengal, if this concession should be extended to the latter. It is supposed however that only a fourth of that number will take the bait thus offered. Another remedy for the present block in the North-West is said to be provided in a scheme of graded pay of some kind; but whether it is to be of a permanent, or only of a temporary and special nature, is a point on which our informants again differ. If the scheme however is meant to work at all, we imagine it must be applied

In order to meet the present excess of military officers in civil employ, it is now ruled that all new appointments in nonregulation districts are to be reserved in future for civilians. Something is said indeed about a proportion of military men; but this, at most, appears to apply to the frontier districts of the Punjab. With a view to work off some of the military civilians at once, it is proposed to allow a certain number of those in the non-regulation provinces to retire on the pension of their rank plus the capitalised value of their prospects in the matter of The offer is to include officers who are colonels' allowances. not within two years of the said allowances, but within the current year only. Lest such an offer, which extends to military civilians the benefits of the new colonels' retiring scheme, should not prove tempting enough for the end in view, it is further provided that any senior who may so retire will receive in addition a bonus of one year's pay. This would amount to about £3,000 for a commissioner, and £2,000 for a deputy commissioner-sums quite large enough, we should think, to induce several men to go. How many, it is of course impossible as yet to say; but we hope that the number will be in no way limited by the action of Government. It is also understood that several new districts have been sanctioned for the North-West Provinces; but the necessary details are wrapped in obscurity. The Secretary of State's orders on this head appear to leave a good deal in the hands of the authorities in India.

THE retirement of Captain C. Clerk from the governorship of the Military Prison at Aldershot has been followed by his acceptance of an appointment in Southern India. He is going out in a few days on some special mission to the Court of H.H. the Nizam of Haidarabad.

THE Times telegram of September 17 from Calcutta states that the official programme of the Viceroy's tour is now published. It does not add much to the details already known. He leaves Simla on the 10th October, and spends two days with the Maharajah of Kashmir at Jamu; then he proceeds to Srinagar, where he remains five days. This is the first occasion of a Viceroy visiting Kashmir and returning via Marri. He will inspect two principal frontier stations, Peshawar and Jacobabad. He arrives at Bombay in the middle of December, and leaves on the 21st. He enters Delhi on the 23rd. Lady Lytton, the private, military, and foreign secretaries, and two aides-de-camp accompany him. It is stated that about seventy native chiefs, including the Nizam and Gaikwar, will attend the Delhi darbar. It is reported that many among them are far from pleased with the Viceroy's invitation, as the expense of attending the darbar in full State, coming so soon after the Prince of Wales's visit, will be a heavy drain on their resources. The Committee of Management commences meeting next month. The editors of the principal European and native journals are invited as guests. With this invitation is coupled the somewhat comical announcement, that the care of these gentlemen will be entrusted to the Superintendent of Thuggee and Dacoitee, whose normal functions are suppression of organised brigandage and murder.

From the same source we learn that the report that the Indian Government, acting under Lord Salisbury's orders, is about to appoint natives to several posts hitherto reserved for covenanted civilians gains strength daily. It is said that Sir R. Temple has taken up the project warmly, and submitted a number of names for selection, and that the experiment will be first tried in the Hughli district, which will be officered entirely by natives. The scheme is generally viewed with disfavour in India, even by the leading native papers, such as the Hindu Patriot, Indian Mirror, and Bengali. They doubt whether the Government will select the best men. It is admitted to be a dangerous experiment to put untried and inexperienced men in charge of districts. The proper plan, they say, is to appoint young men to the lowest grade in the service, and let them work their way up in the ordinary course.

According to a recent telegram the Pioneer says that the oft-debated question of the censorship in the Native Press is again before the Government, and preliminary steps will soon be taken which will in the first instance be very forbearing and mild. It is quite time—thinks that journal—that something should be done. The Presidency towns' papers are generally unexceptionable, but the Provincial prints publish daily a mas of sedition and falsehood, which may produce much mischief.

il.

ACCORDING to the Times telegram of Sept. 24, the Doorgs Poojah holidays will be kept in Bengal on Friday. All the public and merchants' offices and banks will be closed till the This time-honoured custom of entirely suspending all business for nearly a fortnight yearly is probably not destined to last much longer. In the old times, when mails arrived and left at long intervals, it caused no perceptible inconvenience. In these days of telegraphs and weekly mails it is another matter. Business men are gradually working up to make a stand against the practice. There was a talk this year of petitioning Government to curtail the holidays, but nothing has been done. It will doubtless be carried into effect shortly, and the holidays will be reduced to the three or four days which the Hindoos consider really sacred. Even the hardest worked clerks will hardly regret the change when it comes, for at this season the weather renders holiday-making in the Plains impossible, and a fortnight is too short a time for a trip to the Hills. The prevalence of cholera in Jumnoo and Cashinere is likely to alter entirely the plan of the Viceroy's tour. The disease is abating somewhat at Sealkote and Jumnoo, but four hundred and fifty cases were reported in Sreenuggur during the week ended the The resident advised visitors to leave the valley.

WE also learn that Simla telegrams announce that the continuation of the Rajpootana State Railway will be taken in hard at once, and the line from Ajmere to Neemuch will have early attention. This is a most important step towards completing the connection between Bombay and Northern India, which, when finished, will avoid a roundabout route by Allahabad. Bombay people would, however, prefer the broad-gauge line joining their own railway system at Ahmedabad, and that would certainly be preferable both from a commercial and a strategic point of view.

From the same source we learn that the Kohat Pass affairs remain in statu quo. The Afridis show no signs of giving in, and our officers remain on the defensive. It is stated that the eldest son of the Akhoond of Swat is ready to join the Afridis with 1,600 men if we attack them, but this, like most faontier reports, must be received with caution. Another item of frontier news to which the same remark applies is that the Amir of Cabul shows much favour to the Russian Envoy, and has told the British Agent he may leave the country.

THE same telegram states that Sir Philip Wodehouse, whose period of service as Governor of Bombay expires next summer, has asked to be relieved in March. It is also reported that Sir Bartle Frere has agreed to accept another term of service in Bombay, and that he will come out for the Delhi Durbar and assume office when Sir Philip Wodehouse leaves. The Punjab Lieutenant-Governorship falls vacant in the beginning of the year. It is generally believed that Sir Lewis Pelly will succeed to it.

THE Mussulmans of Bombay have held a large Mosque meeting, at which they adopted a resolution to petition her Majesty not to change her Eastern policy in a way tending to dismember the Turkish Empire.

RAIN is much wanted in the Punjab, according to the latest telegrams. Elsewhere the weather is favourable, and crops promising well.

A RECENT article in the Calcutta Englishman contained a statement concerning Lord Napier of Magdala, which, if true, would have greatly lessened our faith in his Lordship's impartiality. Lord Napier was charged with perpetrating a regular "job" in favour of Colonel Dillon, to the detriment of Colonel Mitchell, R.A. The Army and Navy Gazette, however, is assured that there is "not the smallest truth in the 'statement of facts,' which evidently comes from some one with interests to serve, and with an animus against Colonel Dillon, which is plain enough in the accusation that he 'in a roundabout way, more swo,' sought anything whatever for himself. Of Colonel J. A. Mitchell, C.B., we have not a word to say, except that we believe he would not lend himself to the disparaging remarks directed against Lord Napier of Magdala and Colonel Dillon.'"

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pall Mall Gazette makes the following pertinent remarks on the coming assembly of Indian Princes at Delhi during the Christmas holidays, as viewed in the light of Lord Lytton's recent manifesto in favour of public economy:—

11.75 21.75 21.45 Treading closely on the heels of Lord Lytton's resolution enjoining the strictest economy in all branches of the Indian Administration comes the announcement of the Imperial festivities that are to be celebrated at Delhi during the Christmas holidays. Princes, chiefs, and nobles from the remotest provinces of Hindostan are invited to gather together at the capital city of the old Moghul Emperors to do honour to their Sovereign Lady, Victoria, India Imperatrix. In defiance of threatened deficits and present cholera, it is stated that a camp of some 15,000 soldiers of all arms will be formed on the site occupied in a similar manner last year. A durbar of surpassing magnificence will be held in the open air, and entertainments worthy of the august occasion will succeed each other in rapid sequence. To stave off all danger of the obscurity and oblivion that overwhelmed the ante-Agamemnonian heroes for want of a sacer vates, a special camp will be pitched for the representatives of the newspaper press. But here, as elsewhere, the inevitable bitter drop lurks at the bottom of the flagon. How is this mighty expenditure to be defrayed? If public works, even of a productive character, are rigidly curtailed on the ground of financial necessity, whence will the funds be derived that shall pay for this brilliant demonstration of Imperialism? That is the question people are asking each other in India, and there is no one who can give a satisfactory really.

In view of the present crisis in European Turkey, Mr. Grant Duff's dream, as lately propounded in the Times, suggests at any rate one likely mode of solving the difficulties which the Eastern question offers to the minds of statesmen and diplomatists in most parts of Europe. It is evident, we think, that the old British policy of bolstering up the Turkish power, as a safeguard against Russian aggrandisement and Anglo-Indian disquietude, has received its death-blow from the hands of the British nation; and the question now is, how to protect the Christian provinces of Turkey from the continuance of Turkish misrule. Answers to this question have been furnished by Mr. Gladstone and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, both of which embody the principle of freeing these provinces from the direct rule of the Porte. Mr. Grant Duff would go a little further in the same direction. His dream, as he modestly calls it, contains proposals which we have heard before in private talk, but he may fairly claim the credit of bringing those proposals into public notice. While duly maintaining the titular dignity of the Sultan, and letting him rule as he likes in Asia, Mr. G. Duff would place all European Turkey in charge of a number of those Anglo-Indians who are now dying slowly of ennui" in England. At the head of this new Government he would appoint our own Prince Alfred, whose marriage to a Russian princess would secure the ready con cert of our Northern rival, while his close connection with Germany would remove all hindrances from that quarter to his enthronement in the capital of the Byzantine Cæsars. The English prince to whom the Hellenes once offered their throne could hardly fail, he thinks, to prove acceptable to those Greeks who do not hanker after Constantinople; and his establishment on the Bosphorus would guarantee Austria from the danger of annexing more Slavs to her composite empire. Italy, for her part, would hail with pleasure the foundation of a dynasty pledged to "peace, conciliation, free-trade, and the maintenance of pecuniary engagements," while, as for France, the new arrangement would certainly displease her less than any other that could be proposed, especially if "niches" were tound in the public service of the new Government for "the active spirits of many lands." This programme which looks so big, Mr. Grant Duff deems really smaller than Mr. Gladstone's, which involves the chances of "prolonged anarchy and frightful bloodshed" consequent on a general breaking up of the present system of Government. Under Mr. Grant Duff's scheme, on the other hand, there need not be any sweeping changes of personnel, for "as many of the old Turkish officials would be kept as could be used" under Anglo-Indian chiefs, who would merely play the part so brilliantly played by their countrymen of yore "in the Deccan and in so many other broad lands." Here is a prospect which many Anglo-Indians weary of forced idleness at home, or disgusted with their slow promotion and diminished chances of usefulness in India, would hail with unmixed delight. That the dream is one which might be realised, we have no doubt. What our countrymen have done in India they could do again under right conditions in Bosnia and Bulgaria, where the presence of conflicting creeds and races complicates the question which Europe is now considering. In this case ce n'est que le premier pas qui coute, and the first step once taken, Mr. Grant Duff's programme could soon be successfully carried out. But have we any statesman in power bold enough to propose the making of an experiment so fraught with certain good to the people now suffering from Turkish misrule? And is it likely that the other Powers interested in the settlement of the Turkish difficulty would agree to enforce upon the Porte the adoption of such a scheme, if it were laid before them and found favour in their eves?

In a recent letter to the Times, Mr. Maclean, whose name, we believe, is familiar to the citizens of Bombay and not un-known to readers of the Bombay Gazette, argued strongly against the policy of retrenching outlay on reproductive works in India, in order to make good the loss of revenue caused by the low rate of exchange on the rupee. To carry out such a policy in the middle of the financial year, "when establish ments have been erected in India and cannot be cast adrift, and when Cooper's Hill College is sending forth batches of young engineers, for whom on their arrival in India there will be no work to do," is a kind of economy which some people cannot understand. Mr. Maclean would liken it to the wisdom of a Highland proprietor, who, having greatly improved his estate with the help of borrowed money, "suddenly determined to make no more improvements because he had to payfive per cent. to a capitalist in London for the use of money which was probably bringing him in fifty per cent." But it may be pleaded that a good deal of the money hitherto borrowed by the Indian Government has been wasted on works which yield no adequate return. That, however, is an assumption which neither the India Office nor Mr. Maclean is willing to accept. The latter maintains that no country out of Europe, save America, and perhaps few countries in Europe, "can show a better direct return on railway capital than we get in India,' while the indirect returns from Indian railways, both to Government and people, have been incalculable. Thanks to her railways, India can now bear a yearly drain of fifteen millions to England more easily than she bore the drain of five millions twenty years ago. Such being the case, it seems all the more unwise, according to Mr. Maclean, to stop short in the work of improvement, so long as it involves no new taxation, at the very time when a low rate of exchange entails on the Indian Treasury a loss of more than two millions a year. One easy mode of recouping that loss may be found in the raising of loans in this country for the carrying on of important public works in India. If the India Office, for example, says Mr. Maclean, were to raise six millions here at 41 per cent. for the construction of lines from Ajmir to Ahmadabad, and from Nagpur to Raipur in the Central Provinces—two lines most urgently needed for trade purposes—in three years both these lines might be completed, while the interest on the loan for that period would be more than covered by the consequent rise in the exchange value of the rupee. If the payment of six millions into the Home Treasury caused a rise of no more than a penny, that end would be secured. The lines in question once opened, a large and steady traffic would soon set in, whose good effects would extend to the guaranteed railways with which they would be connected. In view of results like these, which Mr. Maclean shows good reasons for predicting, we may well ask with him whether it is wise policy to put off the construction · · of useful public works on account of the present depreciation · of silver.

THE Pioneer informs its readers—we believe on good authority—that one of the earliest vacancies in the list of K.C.S.I.'s will be bestowed upon Col. George Chesney, R.E., "chiefly in recognition of his success in establishing that admirably organised institution, the Royal Engineering College at Cooper's Hill. In fact, but for the prodigal fashion in which the Prince of Wales dealt with the order just before leaving India, Col. Chesney would doubtless be Sir George already."

In his Report on Indian Railways for the past year Mr. Juland Danvers concludes, from his recent journeys in India, that the railways "are conferring immense benefits on the country; that they are upon the whole in good condition and carefully managed; that they may do more than has hitherto been done for the development of traffic, and for the increase of profits; that a decrease in the rates of some of the present charges for conveyance and an increase of facilities would assist to accomplish these objects; that measures of this description have been and are still being taken; that close attention is required to the expenses of working and maintenance in order to secure economy; that the extension of the present system, and the construction of light feeders is much to be desired, whenever the state of the finances of the country admits of the necessary expenditure.'

TURKEY AND THE INDIAN MUSSULMANS.

In the course of his speech at Edinburgh on Saturday last, Sir Stafford Northcote protested in the clearest terms against the notion that England's policy towards Turkey was influenced by any especial concern for Mohammedan feeling in India:—

I have heard it said lately that we are perhaps inclined to think lightly of the misgovernment of parts of the Mohammedan Empire of Turkey, because we may fear if we in any way give offence to the Mohammedans in Turkey on account of their misgovernment of their Christian subjects we may produce a feeling among our own Mohammedan subjects in India which would be very injurious to us. I must say I never heard a more extraordinary doctrine than that, nor one which I am more completely prepared to repudiate. Upon what, I ask you, does our Empire in India really rest? Upon what would we claim to rest the dominion which we exercise over those great masses of Mohammedans and Hindus? Why, it has been nobly said in words far more eloquent than I could have thought of that we rest the claim of Great Britain to the Government of India upon the divine right of good government. That which we desire ourselves to see as the principle upon which our sway is to be exercised we feel must be the principle on which, if there is any truth, any solidarity in any country, that country must rest its administration. And to think that England or Great Britain could look contentedly upon misgovernment in any part of the world upon such a plea as that is entirely to misjudge, entirely to misrepresent, our sentiments.

Here at any rate we have a plain assurance from the new Ministerial leader in the House of Commons that the policy of the British Government at the present crisis in Turkish affairs will not be guided by any consideration of the danger involved in wounding the prejudices or going against the religious feelings of Indian Mussulmans. On this point therefore Sir S. Northcote is at one with Lord Northbrook, whose Indian experience has taught him to ridicule the belief that England, as ruler of forty million Mohammedans, had any special interest in keeping on good terms with the nominal head of Islam in If the Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke with due authority, we may congratulate ourselves on the timely riddance of a bugbear which has long oppressed the minds of many politicians. It is useless indeed to deny that a good many Indian Mohammedans have a natural and traditional sympathy with the nominal successor to the old Kalifs; and the cry of Islam in danger would doubtless find an echo in India, as well as other countries where the followers of the Prophet muster strong. But, as a writer in the Times, who "lived for years in intimate connection with Indian Mohammedans," has lately remarked—"It is only by a sect of the Mussulmans that the Sultan is considered as the leader of the Faithful; and I think I am right in stating that whatever may be his influence in Central Asia and the trans-Himalayan countries, the Padishah-i-Rum is about as powerful in British India as is the Pope in England." The Moslems in Bombay and elsewhere will go on praying for the welfare of their Turkish Pope, and the confusion of his enemies. Money will be collected in his behalf, and a few fanatics will probably set out for the seat of war, or continue to preach the Jihad they have been preaching in India for years past. But, as the same writer reminds us, "the mass of the Mohammedans in India are a peaceful, order-loving race," and it must not be forgotten that, even during the Mutiny, a large part of the Mussulman population remained either neutral or friendly towards the British power. If the Moghals of the Gangetic Doab and the fanatics of Patna rose or plotted against our rule, Pathans and Punjabis emulated the Sikhs in readiness to fight for the countrymen of Lawrence, Edwardes, and Nicholson, while the great bulk of the Mohammedans in Bengal gave no trouble to their English neighbours.

Not less significant in the same view was the fact of a great Mohammedan rising in 1857, against the very Power which had spent so much blood and treasure two years before in defence of Mohammedan Turkey against a Christian foe. Within a twelvementh after the close of the Crimean War the Delhi Mussulmans showed their gratitude for the help we had given the Sultan of Rum by murdering English men, women, and children, within the palace of a Moghal king who owed everything to English forbearance. From this one fact it is evident that nothing we could now do on behalf of the crumbling Turkish power in Europe would ensure to our Indian Empire freedom from any danger that might be involved in the numbers and tendencies, political or religious, of its Mohammedan subjects. It is even possible that a change of policy on our part towards the Turks might go far to strengthen our hands in India, by disabusing the Indian Mussulmans of wrong impressions as to our relations with the Turkish Sultan. A correspondent of the Times, for instance, tells how during the Crimean War a party of Mohammedans, smoking on the verandah of a house in an Indian town, invited him to sit down beside them and tell them how the war was proceeding. "After doing so, I pointed out the obligation they were under to our country for having aided the head of the Mohammedan faith in the hour of his peril. To my surprise the reply of one man, expressing apparently the views of all, was that England engaged in the war because she was summoned by the Sultan to his standard as one of his vassals." The story is quite in keeping with similar instances of native credulity recorded of late years. There is nothing too absurd for the natives of India to believe of their English masters and of the general state of affairs in the world outside their own experience. The real danger to our interests in India lies in the direction of that very policy which the people of England have all but unanimously condemned Our continued efforts to save Turkey from impending doom would merely be regarded by Indian Mohammedans as a fresh proof of our unwillingness to brave the manifest might of Islam. In dealing with the Turkish question the best thing to do is to put aside all thought of what people will say or feel in India. The Indian hobgoblin is just as unreal as the Russian, if we only face it steadily, in a right spirit. The Mohammedans in India may number forty millions, but what are these in comparison with the two hundred millions of Hindus and other races among whom they dwell? Is there less of disunion now among the former than there was in 1857; and even if there were, has our hold on India been any way weakened, morally or materially, by the events of the last twenty years? If, in spite of our efforts to reconcile the people of India to a rule which at least ensures them peace, order, and a certain amount of well-being, the seeds of disaffection are still rife among them, it would be good policy-apart from higher considerations-to convince the leaders of Mohammedan opinion that they have nothing to look for in the shape of material aid from the Power that now rules Constantinople.

THE blockade of the Afridis in the Kohat Pass is to be made more stringent. No other tribes have joine I them, and there will be no expedition against them.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

A WRONG-HEADED BISHOP.

The Bombay Gazette holds that it is impossible to take a merely legal view of the Bishop of Colombo's claims when their political significance is so grave. Dr. Coplestone is a paid servant of the State, and by virtue of his office demands that the Government shall connect itself in the most direct and positive way with a system of preselytism to which the bulk of her Majesty's subjects in cem or preservism to which the bulk of her Majesty's subjects in Ceylon are opposed. He is demanding, in fact, what Parliament in 1813 decided it would be politically dangerous to attempt; what the excited people of India falsely accused the Government of attempting in 1857; and what the Queen's Indian Proclamation in 1858 strictly forbids. In 1857, in a despatch regarding a scheme for the education of the Southals through the agency of the Church Missianum Society, the Court of Directors whether the Church Missionary Society, the Court of Directors wrote as follows to the Government of India:—"We are well aware that the Church Missionary Society has been marked equally for zeal as for rectitude of intention and laborious devotion to benevolent objects. But however entitled to our confidence such an institution may have proved itself, we adhere to the conviction that it would be altogether opposed to the rules if you were to take any steps which might have the appearance of uniting the Government with such a society in measures having the aim of converting any class of the population to Christianity." In the following year the Court also wrote:—"It is the duty of all public sequents to convert with good faith the dealers, but the step of public servants to carry out, with good faith, the declared intentions of the Government under which they act. There is no safety for a State if over-zealous individuals be permitted, in the execution of the duties entrusted to them, to substitute their own policy for that of Government. A Government must not be supposed to say one that of Government. A Government mass not be sopposed to say one thing and mean another. The Government will adhere with good faith to its ancient policy of perfect neutrality in matters affecting the religion of the people of India; and we most earnestly caution all those in authority under it not to afford by their conduct the least colour to the suspicion that that policy has undergone or will undergo any change." These principles have been repeatedly affirmed since the Government of India was transferred to the Crown, and to these principles the Government of Ceylon is also virtually com-Does Dr. Coplestone, then, gravely imagine that his episcopal inspiration is going to be allowed to turn our Indian Empire upside down? Even if we assume that he is by the ecclesiastical laws of England entitled to what he claims, can he have persuaded himself that he will ever be permitted to exercise such power to the subversion of that just policy of religious neutrality which England has pledged herself firmly to maintain! The notion is so preposterous that we can only hope for the credit of the Church that Dr. Coplestone will either quickly withdraw from the false position he has taken up or resign his bishopric. If he should persist in his claims it would be obviously the duty of the Government to obtain his recal, apart from any action that might be taken by his Metropolitan or the Archbishop of Canterbury.

THE BISHOPRIC OF CALCUTTA.

The Englishman remarks that four dignified ecclesiastical refusals of an office, with a palace maintained at the cost of the State, and an income of £4,000 a year, coming in quick succession from clergymen whose stip ends do not average a fourth of that sum, is, in-deed, a curious phenomenon. Nor are some of the reasons given deed, a curious phenomenon. Nor are some of the reasons given for these refusals less worthy of notice. It is stated that one clergyman declined the position after consulting with his friends regarding the sources from which the emoluments of the office were derived. These sources are, it need hardly be said, the general revenues of the country, paid, to a large extent, by a non-Christian population. To those who, like ourselves, think that some ecclesiastical establishment is as legitimate a charge on the Indian finances as the Medical Department this objection would not But this view is scarcely compatible with the opinions of the High Church party regarding the dignity and functions of the priestly office. In the first place, that party objects to the Church being considered in the light of an ordinary "Department" of the Civil Government. In the second place, it has a still stronger objection to the Church being regarded as an adjunct of the Military establishment, and defended as an item of military expenditure, on the purely secular line of argument, which would place the pay of the army chaplain on the same grounds as the pay of the regimental surgeon. Finally, the more serious thinkers among the party have a dislike to the Church of Christ being supported by enforced contributions from a Hindu and Mohammedan people, who reject this teaching, and are apt to despise a creed the followers of which do not think it worth supporting at their own expense. The High Church party, when contrasted with the forms of English dissent, strikes the uninitiated spectator as the opposite embodiment of the religious ideal. But all who have had to do with the practical working of the movement become aware that the High Church in England has taken to itself, and incorporated into its system, one of the great principles of English dissent, namely, voluntaryism. The Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment violates that principle in a manner which shocks many good men. It may be a fair question for discussion whether the form of religion professed by a majority of a nation should, or should not, be identified with the Civil Government, and supported by the people in their corporate capacity. The Ecclesiastical Establishment here cannot be defended on this basis. It teaches the religion of a very small minority of the taxpayers, and, from the exclusive pretensions which its creed makes to being the only true faith, it is necessarily offensive to all who do not accept its dogmas. We think, however, that the Indian establishment is capable of being defended on other considerations. The Government of this country requires a vast body of imported servants; and, on financial grounds, as well as for reasons of political expediency, it finds it convenient to watch over the health and morality of its employed No one has yet urged that a large cantonment, or civil station, should be deprived of medical aid, partly paid for out of the public revenues: nor will those who have watched the practical sphere of usefulness filled by the chaplain of a cantonment, or large civil station, question the expediency of the State defraying, at least a portion of his salary. Financially, the Government deals with its chaplains and its surgeons on the same principles. It pays the whole charges for these two sets of functionaries for its military servants, and it contributes a portion of the incomes alike of chap-lains and of surgeons attached to civil stations. We see no other basis on which the Indian ecclesiastical establishment could safely rest its defence. We think the basis a sound one, but it is a basis which the more earnest leaders of the High Church party now refuse to accept.

TURKEY AND THE INDIAN MOHAMMEDANS.

The  $Bombay\ Gazette$  remarks that Lord Northbrook is plunging into home politics in right good earnestness; and the fact that be returned to England from India under a cloud of some kind des not appear to have affected his vivacity in the least. He has made several long speeches during the Parliamentary Session, and now when hon, members and peers have fled to the country to listen to the hoarse cry of the grouse instead of to each other's opinions, he has been taking a Falmouth audience into his confidence with respect to the relations existing between the Mohammedans of Turkey and the Mohammedans of India. His Lordship would appear to be of opinion that, however much certain politicians may endeavour to make the sympathy of Turkish and Indian Mohammedaus a stalking-horse for the argument that England should repeat her Crimean policy and preserve Turkey with English blood and more, there is really no ground for believing that the ordinary ladian Mohammedan cares a rap for his brother in Roum. Lord Northbrook is partially right, and he is partially wrong. A small second tion of Mohammedans in India profess to have a great interest in Turkey. In Bombay we have lately had letters published in English newspapers and Mussulman papers, lamenting that a confederation of Christians seemed likely to be about to throw the Turks back into Asia. We have had appeals for pecuniary assistance for the Sultan from these people. We have also had a profusion of the Sultan from these people. We have also had a profusion of nasty epithets, couched in choice Oriental imagery, hurled at Chris tian dogs, infidels, and such like people. But this movement to create a sympathy between Indian and Turkish Mohammedans is, we believe, confined among one or two crazy or Quixotic individuals, at the head of which appears to be that eccentric Musulman educationist Goolam Mahomed Moonshee. So far as the people are concerned who are using the Indian Mussulman press to create a pro-Turkish feeling, there is undoubtedly a connection of some kind between Mohammedan India and Mohammedan Turkey; and to that extent Lord Northbrook is wrong in declaring that English policy towards Turkey can have no effect in India. But as we believe that the attempt to create a strong Mohammedan pro-Turkey feeling in this country has proved almost abortive, some flowers symptops but the provided by the strong Mohammedan pro-Turkey feeling in this country has proved almost abortive, some flowers symptops but the provided by the strong life. pathy but very little money being alone forthcoming, we think that the late Viceroy is right in the main, and that England sheald go straightforward with whatever policy she has in hand with out being influenced by the opinions of a few dozen Indian Mohammedans. Moreover, as our Anglo-Indian correspondent pointed out in a recent letter to us from London, England could expect very little sympathy from India in return for any exertion she might make on behalf of Mohammedanism in Europe. In the Crimean peninsula England did a good deal for Turkey—mere than Turkey is ever likely to have done for her again by a Christian Power; but did England's sacrifices on that occasion prevent the deeds of 1857? At a time when English power was hanging in the balance in India, was there the slightest symptom of a desire to help us on the part of the Mohammedan community as a grateful state of the Mohammedan community as a grateful return for what English blood and money had achieved on behalf of the only Mohammedan kingdom in Europe? No—there was not. Therefore England's policy in Turkish affairs should be conducted with regard to its own inherent merits; and the foolish attempts of a few reasons who are the conducted with regard to its own inherent merits; and the foolish attempts of a few reasons who are the conducted with the conducted wi of a few persons who ought to know better than strive to stir up political feeling in India should be treated with the indifference they deserve. The idea of making Mr. Goolam Mohammed Moonshoo or proposed like him as follows: shee, or persons like him, a factor in England's Imperial policy! It is too absurd to be discussed.

COURT-MARTIAL ON CAPTAIN PLAYFAIR.

The Court-martial assembled at Fort William for the trial of Captain Archibald Lewis Playfair on certain charges advanced against him in connection with his duties as Superintendent of the Hazaribagh Jail was ordered by the home authorities on the earnest solicitation of Captain Playfair. This officer is defended by Messrs. Macrae and Reilly, barristers-at-law. The Court was to try the prisoner on the following charges:—

1st. Having at some date subsequent to the 15th October, 1874, erased, or caused to be erased, a remark written in the margin of page 163 of the visitors' book of the European Penitentiary at Hazareebaugh, by H. S. Beadon, Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Hazareebaugh, consisting of the following words or words to the like effect, viz., "No, I mean re-introduced—H. S. Beadon," with the intention of suppressing from the notice of superior authority the fact that Mr. Beadon had ascertained that a certain new scale of diet for the prisoners had been introduced into the Penitentiary previous to the 16th October, 1871, which fact he, Captain Playfair, had by an entry in the said book on the latter date denied.

2nd. Having with the aforesaid intention acted in contravention of the rules of the Jail Department, and neglected the orders of his departmental superior by not forwarding copy of certain remarks written by Mr. Beadon in the then said book on or about the 28th November, 1874, which record contained an explanation why Mr. Beadon had stated, on the 16th October, 1874, by an entry in the said book, that the said new scale of diet had been reintroduced into

3rd. Having on the 20th February, 1875, with the aforesaid intention previous to sending the said visitors' book to Colonel Boddam, the Deputy Commissioner of Hazareebaugh, removed therefrom pages 165 to 168, both inclusive, containing the said Mr. Beadon's remarks made by him about the 28th November, 1874, referred to in the second instance.

AN UNLUCKY RAILWAY.

The Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway is a most unfortunate line. We learn that a pier near the East Bank of the Satlej Bridge has succumbed to the force of the high flood in the river, and that, with two pairs of girders, it has gone into the stream, thus, for a considerable time to come, breaking all through communication between Lahor and the Lower Provinces. This great calamity to the railway and the public occurred on the 10th inst., and, on the following day, the line at the Rumi li Bridge, near Jallandar, and between that cantonment and the river Beas, was also washed away. Thus, for travellers between Lahor and Sinla, there are two serious breaks to be passed over. Doubtless, means and appliances will at once be resorted to no order to keep up passenger and mail communication, but it will be many months before a railway engine will be able to cross the fine two ge erected over the Satlej.

This lass been for many years past a very unfortunate railway in respect to its iridges. Running, as the line does, across the water-way of the Punjab, it has to withstand at certain seasons the whole force of the mo ortain torrents from the Himalayas; as a line of observation for parament State railways it must be of invaluable assistance. The engineers of the Punjab Northern State Railway have been able to prove by experience thus gained, and, looking upon it in that light, it has served a good purpose; but it must be very dis heartening to the able chairman of the company, Mr. W. P. Andrew, to find that, in spite of all the scientific and professional care bestowed upon the bridges and their preservation, they cannot resist the power of the waterway of the country. Mr. Joseph Harrison. the late agent and chief engineer of the company, did for several seasons successfully combat the floods; and this he effected by a process he himself first originated in this country-by forming a strong bed of solid stone around the piers of the bridges. This prevented both the Satlej and Beas rivers from destroying the bridges in 1873-74, and its action was so remarkably good, that some of the highest men in the Institute of Engineers considered it one of the best means yet tried for strengthening such works in India. Mr. Harrison's reward however, was his own feeling of satisfaction at the result of his labours. It would have been a graceful act on the part of Government to have conferred on him some token of their appreciation.

It is to be hoped the new works at the Satlej will be completed as quickly as possible. Probably the Government will, through the Secretary of State, grant the working and maintenance of the Indus Valley line to the Sind, Punjab and Delli Pailway, and thus form a continuous railway communication between Agra, Delhi, and Karachi, giving to the Panjab or Multan secretary of the company a share of the sea-going traffic. This will, as a indeed military and political importance, be of immense service to the Sare. Troops and material of war can be pushed on from Karachi to Pelacwar without break of gauge.—Englishman, Aug. 22.

Mr. W. H. Gordon acts as Joint Sessions Judge of Darjiling.

Miscellaneous.

SIR LEWIS PELLY.—The latest appointment given to Sir L. Pelly, by the gossips, is that he is to succeed Sir H. Davies as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

East Indian Railway.—The receipts of the East Indian Railway for the week ended the 5th of August show an increase, as compared with those of the corresponding week of last year, of £3,039. Those of the Jabalpur line show an increase of £4.

HUGHLI BRIDGE.—The Bengal Chamber of Commerce have protested against the terminal charge levied on coals by the East India Railway, under the Hughli Bridge Act, as the bridge is self-supporting without the charge. They have also written strongly to the Municipality on the refusal to supply the shipping with water.

Mr. C. Bayley from leave, Mr. Metcalfe, who has been officiating for him as Commissioner of Patna, will be appointed to officiate as Inspector-General of Police, as Mr. Hankey is going on six months' leave.

—Englishman, Aug. 28.

Civil.—There are reported changes in Bengal, a regular shifting of appointments, something, says social gup, after this fashion:—Mr. Dampier succeeds to Mr. Schalch, Mr. Buckland to Mr. Money, Mr. Horace Cockerell to Mr. Buckland, Mr. Ross Mangles to Mr. F. Cockerell, Mr. A. Mangles to Mr. E. Lowis.

Colonel Maisey.—Colonel Maisey, who lately vacated the appointment of Deputy Judge Advocate General, on succeeding to colonel's allowances, has been allowed for the present to retain office as Examiner of Military Law in connection with Garrison Instruction. For six months after a colonel obtains his off-reckonings he has a right to retain his Indian allowances, and during this period remains available for duty.—Times of India, Sept. 1.

FRONTIER NEWS.—Pahlwan Khan, one of the Chiefs of Chittral, has assembled a force of 4,000 or 5,000 men with the intention of hunting down Moolk-aman or Aman-ool-Moolk, the former ruler of Chittral.—There is an internal religious war in Boneyr in consequence of one of the chiefs having seceded from the Suni section of the Mohammedans and joined the Shias. A good many lives have already been lost.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 26.

TROOPS IN THE HILLS.—The extent to which European troops are this year enjoying the privilege of residence at the hill stations is very great. From recent returns which the Pioneer has obtained, and on which our contemporary says he can rely, we learn that there are at present 9 150 European soldiers, with 839 soldiers' wives and 1,810 children, distributed through the various permanent or temporary hill stations of the Bengal Presidency.

CHOLERA.—We are sorry to lear that cholera, after an absence of many years, has broken out again in Bareilly. The Royal Irish have had five cases and three deaths. The company in which the disease broke out was in camp for the usual time, and then returned to cantoninents. The disease has since appeared in the Royal Artillery—one woman being the sufferer. The Sudder Bazar is in quarantine, and up to date there have been sixteen admissions (natives) to hospital and ten deaths, with an addition of seven fatal cases of deaths out of hospital. Sulphur fires have been burned for many days, and at last discontinued as being useless and entailing great expense. Many cases have occurred in the city, and some also in the native pagal-khena. The weather is showery, with alternate days of sunshine and heat.—Pioneer, Aug. 30.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROSS.-Reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops, for the week ending the 24th August, state that in the northern districts of Madras fair rain appears to have fallen; in the south the fall has been lighter; prospects are said to be unchanged. In Sind prospects are good, the rest of the Bombay Presidency good rain appears to have fallen only in Guzerat; in Khandesh, Nassik, the Deccan districts, and the Southern Mahratta country more is urgently required. In Berar seasonable rain has fallen, and prospects have improved. In the Central Provinces favourable rain has fallen in most districts; in Chanda and Bhandara more is wanted for the rice crops. In Bengal seasonable rain is reported from all districts, and reports are good, except from Pooree, where the crops are backward. Copions rain has fallen in Assam. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh prospects are good. In the Punjab more or less rain has fallen everywhere except at Mooltan; more is wanted at Hissar, but the property are except at the control but in the punjable. In Control but he provided the control but are provided to the provid but reports are generally favourable. In Central India abundant rain has fallen, and prespects are excellent. Rain is also reported from Rajpootana, but none has fallen in Serohi, Harowtee, or Jhallawar; in the first-mentioned tracts it is much wanted.

REMOUNT AGENCY.—The appointment of Captain Roberts to the Remount Agency is one that will give great satisfaction both on public and personal grounds. As a judge of a horse he justly enjoys a high position, and is second to none in India, reading and studying the horse in a way that can only arise from a thorough appreciation of that noble animal. Personally Captain Roberts is considered the soul of honour, outspoken honesty, and straightforwardness in sporting circles. That is a character not easily or rapidly gained, and it is a guarantee for stability of purpose and Digitized by action that will assuredly manifest itself in his new capacity. In him importers of horses will soon learn that they will have plain treatment and a fair price for good cattle. The Government may safely rely upon him to keep up a high standard of remounts within the limits of the powers entrusted to him. The lovers of sport at Umballa and elsewhere will miss him as a central point towards which to look whenever there is occasion for action or reference. Lastly, the public may feel assured that once more a right man has been put into a right place.—Indian Daily News.

THE FIRST BISHOP FOR LAHORE.—It is likely, it seems, that the Rev. Mr. Baring will be appointed first Bishop of Lahore. This gentleman is, we presume, the Rev. F. H. Baring, who came to gentleman is, we presume, the Rev. F. H. Baring, who came to India two or three years ago, as a missionary of the C. M. S., and who a few months back was stationed at Umritsur. The wisdom of the appointment may be questioned if the stories told of Mr. Baring in Upper India be true. He is a nephew of Lord Northbrook's, and seems to be endowed with the same intolerant nature. Thus we have heard of his directing from the pulpit, and in another man's church, a peon to remove a cross from the altar and carry it out of the church. It is men of these intolerant tempers-whatever they call themselves, High Church or Low Church, or Broad Church or no Church, who set everything on fire in their neighbourhood. trust Mr. Baring is not coming, if the stories we have heard about him are true. We believe the late venerated Bishop had to snub him heavily, and Lord Northbrook also at the same time with him, for some ecclesiastical vagaries during the Prince's visit. Edgar Jacob, the late Bishop's chaplain, would be a really good nomination, but he is hardly of the legal age, we imagine, for a bishop, who must be thirty years old.—Calcutta Statesman, Aug. 23.

COLONEL MACGREGOR.—A writer in the Simla paper defends an cfficer who has lately been subjected to a most unpardonable attack. He says:—"Lieut. Col. C. M. MacGregor C s t, Bengal Staff Corps, than the recent attack upon whom no grosser libel ever was penned, is shortly returning to India, where he rejoins the Quartermaster-General's Department, an office of which, before many years, he will, I believe be found to have assumed charge. If the writers of the I believe, be found to have assumed charge. If the writers of the paragraphs reflecting upon him could have heard the indignation with which they were read at home, they would have seen how diametrically opposed are the views entertained by the officers who know Colonel MacGregor to those they expressed. No more important duty has been performed of late years than that which was entrusted to him, and which he so ably carried out. I was speaking last week to a good authority on such matters at the India-office, and he con-demned the onslaught upon Colonel MacGregor as one of the most shameful things ever given insertion in an Indian paper. This aushameful things ever given insertion in an Indian paper. This authority places Colonel MacGregor's name amongst these of the most competent men the Indian Army can boast, as he feels certain, he says, that the Colonel is bound to rise to the very highest responsibilities. Nor is his opinion at all at variance with those of others with whom I have conversed."

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE PRESS.-The Government of India, we are told by the Calcutta Statesman, and as we (Bombay Gazette) ourselves know, have under consideration the relations of the Government with the press, but what the Government proposes to do has not transpired. The special privileges which the Pioneer has been permitted to enjoy, and which that paper has told the world have been gained by means of "judicious profusion" on its part, will doubtless be abolished, and in their place a more just and respectable method adopted for giving information on public matters to the press, which certainly ought to be circulated in a more authoritative form than any single paper, let its "profusion" be ever so great, can possess. The Statesman alludes feelingly to the position that the Indian Economist held when the editor of the latter paper was at the same time in the service of the Government. He, we now learn, found how difficult it was to serve two masters—the public and the Government—and how he held to yield to the transport of the transport headers. he had to yield to the stronger of the two, the Government, because, we are now told, "the late Viceroy positively required that the proof sheets of the Indian Economist should be submitted to the Government before publication." This humiliation must have been terribly galling, but, adds the Statesman, "the whole story we shall now have to tell." No wonder after this that the Government was asked to No wonder after this that the Government was asked to purchase the Indian Economist.

THE FULLER CASE AND THE NATIVE PRESS .- It may fairly be replied to a portion of the native press, in the Fuller case, that they have practically supplied the refutation of their own position. Lord Lytton's argument is that very many natives of India have diseased spleen; that most English people know that this is the case; and that, consequently, striking them is especially reprehensible. The spieen; that most English people know that this is the case; and that, consequently, striking them is especially reprehensible. The native press says, "No, spieen is not common." Now, whom are we to believe? If the native press is right, then the general statement of Lord Lytton is wrong, and any inferences he draws from that statement as a premise fall to the ground. We are thus thrown back upon the inference which the native press would draw, that intentional beating to death, or beating which is so violent as to be likely to convend the pressure of Europeans to works not iver to cause death, is common on the part of Europeans towards natives. We venture to deny this absolutely, and the onus of the proof in the absence of supporting facts lies with those who make the assertion. If, then, spleen is not common, and violent beating is not common, why is there all this discussion? At all events, whichever way the truth may be, we have had the unedifying spectacle of the Governor. General in Council pursuing precisely the same precipitate course as the native press. He and they generalise from insufficient ground, or at all events without adducing sufficient grounds, and his Lordship generalises without advancing a single fact in support of his views, after less than a six months' residence in India.—Friend of India.

MAJOR WILSON, R.E.-The Pioneer hears that Major Wilson, of the Royal (Imperial) Engineers, is employed at the India-office in compiling a map of Afghanistan. The want is one that has long been felt, and of Major Wilson's ability to supply it there can be no drubt. But could not some equally competent officer of the Indian series have been found to perform the task? We have a vague suspicion that the friction between the India-office and the Government of India places unnecessary and regretable difficulties in the way of employing Indian public servants on special duties in Europe. cutta sends home an officer, with a request that he be placed on daty in England to learn the manufacture of fire-bellows, or do bearleader to the ambassador of Barataria, virtuous Downing-street at once scents jobbery in the gale that wafts him to Brindisi; while, on the other hand, should the Secretary of State announce that the services of Colonel Dowbiggin now on furlough are being utilised in squaring the circle or extracting sunbeams from cucumbers, his Excellency in Council has been prone to remark sarcastically that the operation might be more readily performed in Calcutta, and that its hoped that Colonel D. will not fail to return to India on the expira-tion of his furlough. Some time ago Government proposed that no officer employed in Europe should draw more than two-thirds of his Indian salary, and the Secretary of State feeling, however, that the shot was aimed at him, could not do otherwise than assent. It must have been, therefore, with peculiar satisfaction that he saw the first officer sent to Europe on duty bringing with him a letter from Calcutta begging that he might be allowed to draw his full pay. The request has, of course, been refused, and the last state of affair is worse than the first. Perhaps Major Wilson's highest qualification in the eye of the India-office is that the Government has no right to express its opinion on the appointment.

THE AFRIDIS.—The Lahor paper publishes the following frontier news:—"The Afridis of the Kohat Pass having temporarily vacated their defensive posts on the Kothul or crest of the Pass, and also the towers held by them at the mouth of the Pass, on the Kohat side, and gone off to some distance to attend the funeral of a man of some note in their clan, information of the fact was communicated to the Deputy Commissioner, who ordered the Bungush tribe of the Kohat Valley to occupy these posts on behalf of the British Government. On hearing of this the Afridis returned in haste and gave the Bungushes the option of vacating peaceably, which the latter did, resigning, at the same time, some of their personal property, which they were either not able, or not permitted by the Afridis, to carry of The Afridis are laying in stores of supplies and ammunition, in the full conviction that they will be attacked by a British force at the commencement of the cold season, but they do not exhibit any desire to yield to the demands of the British Government. Indeed, they have received an assurance of help from the Akhoond of Swat in the Mean while, the event of a British force really entering their hills. Akhoond has reiterated his previous order for rigidly excluding all British subjects, servants, and emissaries from Swat, and has authorised the tribes under his influence to go to the assistance of the Afridis, as soon as these latter are attacked by the British. The Afridis of Teerah are still undecided as to which side they shall take; but some designing emissaries from the Kohat Pass Afridis have succeeded in alarming them with stories of the ulterior intention of the British Government to capture Teerah with the help of the Ameer of Cabul, and to extend their frontier in that direction in order to provide a more healthy and suitable location for their European troops than the sickly and deadly valley of Peshawur, and also with a view of obtaining a more commanding and strategic position, from whence they can turn the flanks of the Afridi tribes, and thus act against them more effectively than at present, whenever occasion for doing so arrives."

STATION TALK.

NEGAPATAM, Aug.—Now for news, I, as special constable, had to attend a fire, and a very good conflagration, too, there will be soon, for no less than two thousand tons of coal belonging to the South Indian Railway has commenced smoking, and is expected shortly to burst out in flame. Fortunately, the individual who had charge of the coal has provided a large squirt, so it is probable that some of the coal may be saved. What excellent forethought must have been exercised in storing this coal! It has not been landed very long, and is not at all confined, yet by a judicious arrangement of slack and damp it has already begun to burn. What does it matter? the Railway Company may lose Rs. 25,000, yet the interest on the company's shares is paid all the same.—Another little bit of news about the South Indian Railway is that the agent's and chief accountant's offices are to be removed to Madras, because it is necessary that the Government and the company's agent should be in the same place. No doubt this is a very important consideration; but one would think that it was equally as important that the different heads of the railway should be located together; instead of that, in a short time, we shall have the agent at Madras, the traffic manager at Trichinopoly, the locomotive works at Negapatam, and the chief engineer goodness knows where. The old saying, "Too many cooks spoil the broth," is as true now as ever it was. In railway arrangements Government has a deal to say about them, the railway arrangements Government has a deal to say about them, the railway directors also say a good deal, the railway officials do a good deal which has to be undone, and even the Postmaster-General lately tried to put his spoon in the pot, but happily only burnt his fingers. Negapatam is a moral place, the result, no doubt, of our having a church and occasionally a padre. Strange to say, I have never heard of any one describing the Negapatam Church. It is as unique in its way as Milan Cathedral, or King's Chapel, Cambridge. Certainly it is not so beautiful as either of these buildings. in fact, it cannot be said that it is beautiful at all, yet it is strange, passing strange. It was originally a Lutheran Church, built by the Dutch, to whom Negapatam once belonged, and whose governors, admirals, generals and others have left their marks in hatchments on the once well white-washed walls. Over the pulpit, which is at least sixteen feet high, is a magnificent sounding board, large and ugly enough to send the last century churchwarden into raptures, and there is a gallery in keeping with the pulpit and sounding board. The walls are adorned and beautified by gushing laments on deceased missionaries' babies, done, the laments, not the babies, in foot square dabs of white plaster. I quite agree with Bishop Coplestone that all Low Church clergymen ought to be turned out, not for their peculiar tenets, as the Bishop proposes, but for their ignorance of anything like sesthetics.—Madras Athenaum Correspondent.

CROPS IN THE SOUTH ARCOT DISTRICT. - From a report of the Collector of South Arcot the Board of Revenue are glad to observe that the season compares favourably with that of last year. The cumboo crop it is feared will be partial, but there has been no actual loss as yet, and it may be hoped that matters will improve hereafter. The Collector will watch the state of the season closely and report further, if necessary.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Excellency Sir Nevile Chamberlain, G.C.B., and staff are expected to arrive at Bangalor on the 5th September. There are to be two parades of the troops in garrison during his Excellency's stay—one a show parade on the Maidan, and the other a grand sham fight on the Agram plains. All the troops in garrison, including the regiment of Siladar Horse, have been rehearsing the sham fight at Agram.—South Indian Observer, Aug. 25.

CLOTHING.—It having been reported to the Commander-in-Chief that a great deal of the sickness prevailing amongst the women and children at the convalescent depot is due to their being insufficiently provided with warm clothing, his Excellency desires commanding officers of regiments and batteries to pay particular attention to this subject, and to see that families proceeding to Wellington have in their possession clothing suitable to the climate of that station.

THE BANGALOR RIFLE MEETING.—We hear that only five regiments have signified their intention of competing for the Bangalor Cup; these are the 43rd, 45th, and 67th Regiments, with the M.V. Guards and B.R.V.s. The 48th are still hanging fire, though with the good form they showed here in 1874 we think they ought not to hesitate. We are glad to see that the Madras Volunteers have decided on sending a team, it is a proof that more interest is being taken of late by officers and men in shooting. -Bangalor Spectator.

Dr. Balfour.—The meeting last Saturday evening of Dr. Balfour's friends belonging to all sections of the community, to con-Ballour's friends belonging to all sections of the community, to consider the best mode of recognising that officer's services to the community, was pretty well attended—Mr. Justice Kernan presiding. Several laudatory addresses by members of the several sections of the community were given, and it was ultimately resolved to devote the subscriptions that might be collected towards—in the first instance, getting a good portrait of Dr. Balfour—and, if funds are available afterwards, to establish a scholarship or prize in connection with the Medical College. On Monday a deputation of Mohammedan contlement waited on Dr. Balfour and presented a furawall address gentlemen waited on Dr. Balfour and presented a farewell address in Persian signed by the members of the Madras Mohammedan-Library, to which Dr. Balfour made a reply. Reports of these proceedings are given elsewhere.—Madras Times, Aug. 30.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A sad accident occurred to Quartermaster-Sergeant J. Marshal, of B Battery 20th Brigade Royal Artillery, at Bellary, on the 14th Aug. As he was riding out to parade at about 5.30 A.M. his horse bolted with him, and had scarcely gone more than a hundred yards when he backed and threw the unfortunate man to the ground on his head, Some of the riders who saw the accident immediately conveyed the sergeant to the hospital in a dhoolie, where it was found that the fall had caused concussion of the brain. He remained unconscious till near 11 A.M., when he expired. He was buried the following morning with military honours. The band of H.M.'s 43rd Regiment volunteered their services for the occasion. The funeral was largely attended by both the military and civilians of the cantonment. The sergeant was very popular

THE GOVERNOR.-His Grace the Governor started from Ootacamund, on his tour, on Monday, accompanied by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and their respective staffs. Yesterday the party arrived at Mysor, where they remain till to morrow, and thence proceed to Mercara, returning to Mysor on Sunday. remaining two more days at Mysor his Grace proceeds on Monday to Bangalor, where he remains for four days, during which he will witness the rifle shooting, returning to Ootacamund on the 12th proximo. Grand preparations have been made at Mysor for his Grace's reception as also at Bangalor. A special train has been ordered for the 4th proximo to convey the ladies and others of the gubernatorial party to Bangalor to meet his Grace there on the morning of the 5th instant. Government is expected to break up its establishment at Ooty the last week in September, and all the Government offices will probably return to Madras the first week in October. - Madras Times, Aug. 30.

COURT OF WARDS.—The subject of what changes for the better can be made to secure efficient education for young men entrusted to the care of the Court of Wards has again been before Government; this time with a practical result. It has been decided to engage a competent English gentleman as tutor to such of their wards as, from time to time, they may be disposed to place under his care. He is to reside in Madras, in a separate bungalow, his pupils being accommodated in suitable bungalows in the same compound or in the immediate vicinity, and the expenses for their lodging. &c., being apportioned to the individual means of the wards. The Court proposed a salary of Rs. 500 to rise to Rs. 900 per mensem, for the tutor, but Government have fixed the sum at Rs. 1,000, and a native assistant tutor is also to be engaged on a salary not less than Rs. 150 or Rs. 200 per mensem. The Government consider that amongst other candidates for the post of tutor it is probable that many Staff Corps officers will apply.

MR Pope's Case. - A special telegram from Haidarabad, in Sind, on the 17th August, to the Bombig Gazette, says:-"Mr. Pope's case is decided. He is acquitted of causing grievous hurt, or of causing the death of Ibranim. He is pronounced to be guilty of clusing only simple burt, and is fined Rs. 500. Mr. Pope takes leave."

INDUS VALLEY RAILWAY .- A trial trip of a new engine, to which were attached two saloon carriages, was made on the 8th ult. on the New Indus Valley State Railway. The train ran from Kotri the New Indus Valley State Railway. The train ran from Kotri to Sán, a distance of fifty-four miles. The line was found to be in excellent condition; the last thirty-two miles had never before been run over. The Superintending Engineer, Mr. W. H. Parker, was present, and a party of gentlemen, among them two ladies, celebrated the event in the customary manner. Previous to the train leaving Karachi on the day before Sir W. Merewether travelled in it to one station from Karachi, when the ceremony of "christening" the engine the "Sir William Merewether" was performed by a lady, who broke a bottle of champagne on the engine.

THE NEW MEMBERS OF COUNCIL.—We are glad to notice that the Governor of Bombay has not yielded to the clamours raised by interested persons with respect to the eligibility of certain Parsee gentlemen for a seat in the Bombay Legislative Council. No better selection than Mr. Sorabjee Shapoorjee Bengalee could have been made. He is worth a thousand of those of whose so-called philanthropy and public spirit so much has been made. Perhaps in the case of Mr. Mahomed Ali Rogay it would have been desirable to have a substitute, because we are not aware that that gentleman, however respectable and wealthy he may be, shows any special aptitude for legislation. We suppose that General Kennedy is now a Legislative Council "institution;" but although it appears to be his fate to be a senatorial figure-head, he is undoubtedly capable of doing good public service, as he has wonderful tenacity and con siderable ability. Mr. Graham and Mr. Mandlik are both valuable representative men, and we are glad to notice that they have once more been returned among the noble army of legislators. - Bombay SURGEON GENERAL WYLLIE,—It is announced in the Gazette of India that on the recommendation of the Government of India, her Majesty's Government has been pleased to confer a good service pension on Deputy Surgeon-General David Wyllie, M.D., of the Bombay Medical Establishment, with effect from the 27th December 1875, in room of Lieutenant-General R. R. Younghusband, C.B. Bombay Staff Corps, succeeded to the Colonel's allowance. Dr. Wyllie entered the service as Assistant Surgeon 1st January, 1844. was promoted to surgeon on 8th June, 1861, Surgeon-Major 1st January, 1864, and Deputy Surgeon-General 1st November 1874. January, 1864, and Deputy Surgeon-General 1st November 131, the served in medical charge, 19th Regiment of Native Infantry, with the Bombay Column, Army of the Punjab in 1848-49; at the siege and surrender of Mooltan; battle of Goojerat and pursuit and surrender of the Sikh Army (medal and two clasps); as Staff Surrender of the Sikh Army (medal and two clasps); as Staff Surrender of the Sikh Army (medal and two clasps). geon and Deputy Medical Storekeeper at the siege and capture by assault of Kotah on the 30th March, 1858, and in pursuit of the Gwallor rebel army from June to September, 1858; present at the action of Sanganeer on the 8th, and at the battle of Bunass on the 14th August, 1858 (medal and clasp). Served with the Abyssinian Expeditionary Force as Field Surgeon, 1st Division; present at the capture of Magdala (medal).

FLOODS IN GOA .- The Goa paper gives an account of disastrous floods that have taken place in several localities in Goa, especially in the low-lying tracts on the borders of the river of Chapora. The villages of Nadora, Revora, Colvalle, Camorlim, Oxel, and Siolim lying on the banks of the river have suffered considerable damage in house property, loss of life, and extensive destruction of crops. Dead bodies of human beings were floating down the river, and with them were seen teams of bullocks supposed to have been carried away by the currents from British territory. Among the dead, two children were embracing each other, and a cradle was found which contained the dead body of a child. Along with large trunks of trees that were floating, there was a quantity of furniture which the fishermen were endeavouring to save, and some of the boxes they had secured were found to contain money and gold ornaments. At Colvalle the whole of the hamlets of the fishermen were totally wrecked, and at Camorlim thirty-six houses have shared the same fate. Four days previous to the 25th July the rain was falling in torrents, and the water on that day had risen to an unprecedented height. A funeral at Camorlim had to be conveyed by a boat, it being impossible to wade through the flood. The palace of the Governor at Pangin and the Seminary at Rachol have not escaped injury from the results of the heavy rains.

DEATH OF A WEALTHY NATIVE.—The death is announced of the millionaire of Baroda, Balla Sahib, the successor to the untold wealth of the late Gopalrao Myral. The deceased displayed great liberality in feeding and clothing the sufferers by the Ahmedabad floods for one entire month, exclusive of his pecuniary contributions. His brother succeeds him. The original owner of the treasure by which the Myral family gained opulence was Meyah Mahmood, a contemporary of Sultan Ahmed Padshah, ruler of Ahmedabad, and by whom Ahmedabad was mostly colonised. In those days Badera (then known as "Shuhr Umun," or "City of Safety") was under the sway of Babees, vassals to the Ahmedabad ruler, and Mahmoud, it is said, was then the representative of Sultan Ahmed. And the Bubees to enrol themselves in the good graces of the Padshah by pandering to his avaricious propensities, and whatever he fleeced from the Babees was buried in and about his building. The treasures remained hidden, and Mahmood and his descendants were in To curtail this account, course of time consigned to mother earth. To curtail this account, the Mohammedan reign was supplanted by the Peishwas and the latter by the Gaekwars, and only about a couple or three score years ago Myral Puntdad, relative of the late Gopalrao Myral bought a tottering old house, and was having it rebuilt, when all the money left by Mahmood was discovered. Hence the Myral family wallow in wealth.

ADDRESS TO SIR SALAR JUNG.-The following is a translation of the Address presented to his Excellency Sir Salar Jung, G.C.S.L., by the "Anjuman-i-Islam," Bombay:— To his Excellency Nawab Shuja-ud-Laulah Surab Ali Khan Mukhtar-al-

Mulk Salar Jung Bahadur, G.C.S.I. May his fortune be for ever!

Your Excellency having just landed after your journey to Europe, and this great city of Bombay being the first to hail your presence on your way to your own country, we, the representatives of the Anjuman-i-Islam, desire respectfully to approach your Excellency. Your Excellency is so deeply concerned in the welfare of India, and God the Almighty One having bestowed upon your Excellency high position and great capacities—and for the reason that your Excellency is the Prime Minister of so great a Mohammedan State as Hyderabad, and on account of the glory of the Nizam's dominions (which in this country is the place of security and rest for the Moslems)-it is becoming of us, and our bounden duty, to pay these our respects to your Excellency on this joyful occasion.

The honours which your Excellency has received in London, and in other great cities, have highly delighted the natives of India, and more especially have the Mohammedans shared this delight, among whom are the members of the "Anjuman-i-Islam." The accident that happened to your Excellency at Paris has deeply affected the hearts of us all, and we pray that Almighty God may speedily restore your Excellency to perfect health. We also pray that your Excellency may long live to enjoy the honour and dignity of your exalted position.

In conclusion, it is the carnest desire of the Mohammedans, which the members of the Anjuman share, that the existing alliance and friendship between the British Government and the Government of the Nizam may be firm and close. And they hope that your Excellency's experiences during your late journey may bear fruit in extending improvements and forwarding the civilisation of the Nizam's territory, from which we trust the people will be benefited and improved. Finally, we pray that your Excellency may arrive in safety at Hyderabad, and have a joyful meeting Excellency may arrive in saidly in with your family and friends.

May the sun of your Excellency's fortune ever shins.

C. TYABJEE, President.

GHOOLAM MAHOMED MUNSHI, Secretary.

THE RETURN OF SIR SALAR JUNG TO HAIDARABAD.—(HAIDARABAD, Aug. 26.)—Haidarabad is at the present moment mad with joy. The Nawab Sir Salar Jung has returned in safety from his adventurous journey to the Far West—hundreds upon hundreds of miles west even of far distant Mecca. He has come back to live once more among his devoted people—to bless them with the radiant light of his countenance, which is the sun, light-giving, and warmthproducing, of their day, and the full-orbed moon of their night. Never has the Lion City been in such transports of joy since it commenced its individual existence as a city. It is a matter of recret commenced its individual existence as a city. It is a matter of regret that his Excellency is not altogether so sound of limb as he was when he went away; but let us fervently hope the cruel effects of the injury will wear off with lapse of time, and that in due course he shall find restored to him his pristine ease and vigour of movement. The circumstance of his unfortunate accident seems to be generally overlooked in the general flush of gratitude that the Nawab himself has appeared once more in the flesh—of which, by-the bye, his Excellency seems to have put on a good deal since he crossed the black water, for in my opinion he is much stouter than when he started. The special train conveying the party arrived at nine o'clock this morning sharp, and a salute of welcome was fired by fog signals on the line as the carriages glided slowly into the station. Of course the big wigs from Secunderabad, as well as those of Haiderabad and sweet retiring Chudderghaut, attended to greet the returning Minister. assembled swells were comparatively few in number, but behind them. extending Heaven knows how far in rear, were marshalled thousands upon thousands of unconsidered small wigs, whose untutored hearts throbbed wildly on the occasion with a genuine Oriental impulsiveness of rapture such as you Occidentals have no conception of. Never before did the gates of Haidarabad pour forth such multitudes of people, all bound on an errand of peace, with joy marked on every countenance, and even with ecstacy on not a few more, especially among the congregating Arabs. The sons of Ishmael are hyperbolically stated to worship Sir Salar Jung—you will recollect it was chiefly through their fidelity that he kept matters straight in 1857—and they mustered in their thousands (each man carrying his matchlock and museum of knives) to welcome back their adored master from the land of the Feringhi. Although his Excellency still walks a little lame, requiring the aid of a stick or the arm of a friend, I was glad to observe that he was quite equal to ascending a steep flight of steps which leads up to his own mansion. It must be admitted that the native mode of returning a salute, if more graceful, is not nearly so convenient as that practised in European lands. To go through the form of raising your hand from contact with the ground to contact with your head is apt to impede progress if you are on foot, and give you a tripping appearance at each bob.

THE RECENT WRECK NEAR KARACHI.—The following extract from a letter written by the captain of the ship John Starr, which was wrecked off the Karachi coast some days since, has been placed at our disposal. The captain, officers, and crew have lost all they possessed, and are almost in a state of destitution at Karachi. A subscription list has been opened there, and Captain Parker will be glad to receive contributions. Any sums which are sent to us shall be forwarded:—"On the 1st instant we were getting towards the land, had good observations, placing me at noon on the 1st inst. forty-three miles S.W. from Karachi. At 2 P.M. I sent men up aloft to keep a good look-out for land, which was reported about 2.30. The chief mate went at once up aloft to see if he could pick up the Light-house, and the second mate I ordered to get a cast of the lead. While this was done the vessel struck about eight miles off land. could to get her afloat, but with no avail, and she became a total loss. Mrs. R. and myself have lost all, not having saved anything more than we had on. We saved the ship's papers, and that was all. Our boats were all smashed, and the providential way in which the lives of all on board were saved was certainly miraculous. The top of the forward-house was washed adrift by the heavy seas which were breaking over the vessel. This I had secured after it was washed overboard by a man jumping in the water with a rope and leading it to the same. I then myself went on it, and lashed two spars to it to the same. I then mysel well on it, and to prevent it capsizing. I then got my wife and children lashed to it, and then the whole of the crew, twenty-one persons in all. It was then Wednesday morning, 2nd instant. It was then high time to leave the vessel, as the sea was breaking over her from fore to aft. The cabins were full of water, and the pilot-house in which my wife and children had taken shelter was smashed. The main hatches were burst open, and barrels of beer were floating round the deck, smashing everything they came against with great force. Left the ship between 8 and 9 A.M. The raft was eighteen inches under water, and the sea was breaking over it without intermission. We landed without losing a single life on a low sandy island about noon. Everybody was exhausted, and all fell down on the beach, thanking God for our wonderful escape from death. Rested till about 4 r.m., when we started along the beach in search of a human habitation. About 7 P.M. we came to a creek, where we found some native fishermen, who took us into their boats, and brought us to a native village and treated us very kindly. Next morning, Thursday, August 3rd, we arrived in Karachi, and here we have met with great kindness. Clothing was given us, and Mr. and Mrs. Leggett have given us a home in their house. I cannot describe the kindness of this family. The cause of my accident was an error in my of this family. The cause of my accident was an error in my chronometer of twenty-five miles, which I cannot account for, as it was correct when I made the land off Madagascar. Next a strong current set in to the eastward. Third, the deceptive state of the weather, which was apparently clear and really was not, being hazy on the horizon, hiding the land from view. Lastly, a very incorrect chart, showing twelve fathoms within two miles of the land, where there were not that many feet. My position with a wife and two children is a very sad one at present, and without assistance I shall be in a sore plight. May I say that anything you will do for me, or can do either yourself or by your influence in Bombay, shall be more than appreciated."—Times of India, Aug. 18.

THE BISHOP AND THE MISSIONARIES.

The Bishop of Colombo has expressed the following opinion on the dispute between himself and the missionaries:—"Those clergy whose licenses are withdrawn are, I believe, doing what they think to be their duty in maintaining the long-tolerated, but never acknowledged, freedom of their society; I, on the other hand, believe that my duty is to compel them and their society to submit."

The following telegram from Colombo, dated the 15th ult., is published in the Times of India:—

Bishop Gell's letter to Bishop Coplestone has not been published. Bishop Coplestone has restored all the licences save two, saying that the Metropolitan strongly disapproved of the step he had taken, and counselled their return. Such counsel, he considered, had absolute claim to obedience. This, however, involves no concession, on Bishop Coplestone's part, of the This, however, involves no concession, on Bishop Coplestone's part, of the claims advanced, which he will insist on by all means in his power. Today a second letter appears, restoring the license to one cooly missionary. Bishop Coplestone says the Bishop of Bombay thinks him wrong in the manner he originally dealt with the Tamil Mission. He is writing to the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society. Bishop Coplestone sends an ultimatum, that, unless the control of the catechists and congregations is conceded, and the local unsectarian committee for the Cooly Mission discarded, and liberty granted to all chaplains to interfere with cooly services and schools, the bishop must ask the Society to withdraw from the island. The license of the oldest cooly missionary, the Rev. William Clark, has not been restored. restored.

A later telegram from Colombo, dated 18th August, is published in the Madras Mail:

The licence of the Superintendent of the Cooly Mission is still withheld, those of the other eleven missionaries have been returned.

The Bishop, in a letter home to the Church Missionary Committee, insists upon having absolute control over the Unsectarian Tamil Mission, and claims for chaplains the right of interference with schools, and with services. This can never be accepted.

A resolution of the Church Missionary Society, in answer to the Bishop of Calcutta, some years ago, refused practical control over its lay agents.

Dr. Caldwell has refused Bishop Coplestone's request to him to send Tamil Catechists to supersede those of the Church Mission. A few came from Tinnevelly, but returned rather than assist in the introduction of Pitualize.

The only defection here is that of one young Tamil schoolmaster.

The large majority of the planters give no encouragement to the Bishop.

A great many Evangelical Churchmen have supported memorials to the Queen and the Ceylon Legislative Council for the disestablishment of the local Church.

The Bishop and his chaplains favour the system of confession, and are striving to introduce it.

A further importation of Ritualist priests is expected shortly

The Bishop wants to parcel the country into parishes, and is said to be prepared to spend his own private income, besides large aid from England in carrying out his plans.

The Home Church Committee have telegraphed their support of the mis-

Reconciliation is believed to be now impossible.

From this telegram it is very evident—says the Bombay Gazettethat the Colombo dispute can only be extinguished by extinguishing Bishop Coplestone; if that needful act be not carried out civil war in the Church of England will probably rage considerably at home as well as in India.

Miscellaneous.

REMITTANCES TO ENGLAND .- Government has resolved that whilst all public servants may remit at the rate of 1s. 101d. the rupee, those who have served over a period of fifteen years shall be allowed to remit at par. This scheme is to be permitted to affect all remittances made hence since the 1st of January last .- Ceylon Times.

MR. COLVILLE BARCLAY .- The state of Mr. Colville Barclay's health is so unsatisfactory that he will proceed to Europe by the present French steamer. From what we gather, we do not anticipate his return to the island, a prospect the more to be regretted as Mr. Barclay is in many ways qualified to render essential service to the olony.—Ceylon Times, Aug. 19.

THE OLD BENGAL ARTILLERY .- " Ubique " writes :- " In your paper of last week I read a statement which requires some modifi-You remark that in the Royal Artillery 'it appears that cation. the late Indian officers are commanding six horse and nine field batteries more than their share. I do not know how these statistics are obtained; they may be correct, but as there are no less than three regiments of Artillery in India, it would be fairer to treat them individually than collectively. For instance, the number of officers of the late Bengal Artillery in command of batteries at the present time is only thirty-nine, although there are still forty-one batteries of the old regiment now in the Royal Artillery, which are distributed as follows:—In C Brig., five; in D Brig., two; in F Brig., five; in 8th Brig., one; in 16th Brig., seven; in 19th Brig. seven; in 22nd Brig., seven; in 23rd Brig., seven—total, forty-one. Summary, twelve horse batteries, fifteen field batteries, fourteen garrison batteries—total, forty-one. It would appear, therefore, that so far as the officers of the late Bengal regiment are concerned they are commanding two batteries less than their share in the agthey are commanding two batteries less than their share in the aggregate. Of the thirty-nine majors, ten are in command of Horse Artillery batteries, twenty of field batteries, and nine of garrison batteries, but the collection of the state of the stat batteries; but this only shows that the officers prefer generally the mounted service, and as long as the system of exchanges is allowed and encouraged this predilection cannot be stopped."—Army and Nanu Gazatte Navy Gazette.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders were received at the Bank of England on Wednesday for India Council drafts to the amount of 35,00,000 rupees (say £350,000), which were all allotted at 1s. 7\(\frac{2}{4}\)d. per rupee for bills, and at 1s. 7\(\frac{1}{2}\)d. for telegraphic transfers. This shows a fresh advance of \(\frac{1}{8}\)d. since last week. The amounts taken up were fresh advance of  $\frac{1}{3}$ d. since last week. The amounts taken up were £270,100 for Calcutta, £9,900 for Madras, and £70,000 for Bombay, the Calcutta and Madras tenders for bills at 1s. 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. receiving only 90 per cent. of applications. In consequence of this improvement in price, the quotation for bar silver was firm, at 511d. per oz., but little was on the market.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS. - St. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—Since Sunday the Congress has met twice a day, and some of the most distinguished Oriental scholars have been heard. Amongst the subjects discussed was the following on the Oriental Languages, brought before the Section for India, Persia, &c. M. de Gubernatis, in pre-senting a copy of his learned and valuable work, entitled "Mate-riaux pour sevir a l'étude des Langues Orientales en Italie," addressed the section at some length with reference to the subject about which his book was conversant. He paid an eloquent tribute to the learned individuals and societies of his native country for their care in the development of Oriental learning, and for Italy herself he claimed that she had to so great an extent been the channel for the introduction of that learning generally into Europe. Mr. Kern started a question as to the possible survival, under other and hidden ethnographic names, of the Saci and the Gette, the Ise and the Youei-ti of Chinese writers, who about the Gette, the 1se and the Youel-to of Chinese writers, who about the beginning of the Christian Era had conquered the indigenous peoples of the lower valley of the Indus. This is reserved as one of the insoluble problems for the future exercitation of enterprising scholars; and a like fate has happened to a question having reference to the origin of the Zaza dialect, owing, directly at least, to the sudden illness of M. Lereh, who for a long time has occupied himself with its elucidation. An inquiry into the geographical philological antiquities of the Affghaus resulted, at least provisionally, in the assertion that they are closely allied to the Semitic -that they are, in fact, of an ancient Semitic type, corrected by the influence of the Aryan type. Philologically, it was maintained that this language was independent of the Indian or the Persian; with contact with which it bore only the signs of accidental occurrence, and not of inherent formation.

The Crocodile left Queenstown on the 22nd inst., and is due at Bombay on the 25th of October.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO THE ARMY .- The details of the longpromised increase of pensions to the non-commissioned officers and men of the British Army have been communicated to the various garrison authorities by order of the Secretary of State for War. The new Warrant establishes six classes. The first class will be entitled to a pension of 3s. per day, and will comprise master gunners, regimental and garrison, sergeant-majors, first-class military clerks, bandmasters, and others holding the highest positions allotted to non-commissioned officers. Class 2 will receive 2s. 6d. per day, and include quarter-sergeants, farrier-majors, and other chief artificers, and others of equivalent position. Class 3 is to be permitted to earn the same pension of 2s. 6d. per day as class 2, and is composed of a long list of non-commissioned officers employed as clerks, instructors, and in various other capacities connected with the training and administration of the army. Class 4, which is rated at 2s. 3d. per day pension, embraces a still longer list, enumerating, in fact, all those who have attained the rank of sergeant, and are not included in the foregoing classes, such as battery and company sergeant-majors, and quartermaster-sergeants, drum and trumpet majors, and the whole body of sergeants at large. Class 5 is to have 1s. 6d. per day, and appears to be least benefited of all ranks; but as it includes only corporals and bombardiers and others of relative position aspiring to higher promotion before leaving the service, a comparatively small portion of the army will be affected by it. Class 6 comprises the main body of the army—the gunners, drivers, privates, sappers, and all the rest of junior rank, and they will be entitled to a pension of 1s. 3d. per day, being an increase of 2d. on the old rate, equal to £3 a year per head. All these pen-2d. on the old rate, equal to £3 a year per head. All these pensions will depend as heretofore on the completion of twenty-one years' service, and include good-conduct allowances. For shorter periods of service non-commissioned officers will reckon for every year's service in the rank they hold on discharge as follows:— Class 1, 2½d.; Class 2, 2d.; Class 3, 1½d.; Class 4, 1d.; Class 5, ½d. A similar provision is made for soldiers discharged on reduction after fourteen years' service, or for disability after eighteen years.

THE INDIAN RAILWAYS.—Mr. Juland Danvers's report on the Indian Railways for 1875-76 has been issued. He states that during the year 1875 a length of 261½ miles was added to the system which was open at the beginning of the year, making the whole extent now completed 6,467½ miles. Of these, 768 are constructed with a double, and 5,729½ with a single line; 5,676 are on the 5′6″ gauge, 794 on the metre, and 27½ on a four-feet gauge. The works on the Indus Valley Ballyny have here progressing and it is expected that all Valley Railway have been progressing, and it is expected that all the wells for the large bridge over the Sutlej, between Moultan and Bahawalhur, will be fixed in their places before the end of this year. Fair progress has been made on the Northern Bengal Railway towards Darjeeling. With the exception of the South Indian Railway, the extent of the guaranteed undertakings has not been materially added to during the year. As to the future, the extension of the Rajputana lines southwards from Ajmere has been sanctioned so as to form junctions with the Indore line on the east, and the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway at Ahmedabad on the west. The opening of the Suez Canal has produced a revolution in the trade between England and India, says Mr. Danvers, and this line has become of infinitely more importance than when Lord Dalhousie, in 1853, described it as one of "the greatest political and commercial value, and calculated to afford the greatest amount of general advantage." It is estimated to cost Rs. 1.84.06.261, or about Rs. 61,300 per mile. The other line, 133 miles long, will be in continued to the present matre gauge railway from Khundwa to Indeed, and will pass through Neemuch. Its cost is put down at Rs. 82.48.660, or Rs. 62,000 per mile. Mr. Danvers remarks that the greater part of the travels of the Prince of Wales was performed on the railways, and they contributed to the success of the Royal progress. The visit of the Prince, he adds, has given a considerable stimulated without the success. siderable stimulus to railway travelling among the natives of India. During the twenty-five years since the railways were commenced 5,181,721 tons of goods, of the value of £34,660,460, have been shipped from this country in 8,495 ships, seventy-five of which have been wrecked on the voyage. Mr. Danvers has made a personal inspection of all the railways in India, and reports the existing lines to be in good condition. Natives are extensively employed in the railway made and are being gradually trained to manage the railway workshops, and are being gradually trained to manage the locomotive; while many of them fill the positions of stationmasters, clerks, and assistants to traffic managers, as well as accountants and guards.

Summary and Review.

Our latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, September 8; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, September 6; Calcutta, September 5.

Heavy floods, owing to a burst of unusually heavy rains, are reported from Western and Central India. The Bombay, Baroda, and Central Indian Railway has been a special sufferer. The large bridge over the Narbada at Broach has had thirty arches washed away, and fears were for a time entertained at Surat for the safety of the bridge over the Tapti. Three of the servants of the company were on the Narbada bridge when several of the piers fell, and one, the Parsi bridge-inspector, was drowned. On September 7, however, the Tapti fell two feet, and the bridge was reported safe. The river Mahi beyond Baroda had risen thirty-eight feet high. On Tuesday, the 5th, news arrived in Bombay that the Narbada at Indor had risen twenty-five feet in one day, and engineers then began to fear for the safety of the Narbada Bridge; in fact, one gentleman said the bridge would be washed away that evening, and subsequent events nearly verified his calculation. According to latest mail news the waters were subsiding, and the traffic was being renewed.

THE following appears to be a corrected statement of the troops told off for the great gathering at Delhi in honour of the newly made yet long since recognised Empress of India:—

Horse Artillery.—A, C, and F Batteries F Brigade; Field Artillery.—D.8th, F.8th, G.11th, A-19th, and 7-21st Brigade; Hussars—10th, 11th, and 15th; Foot—1.6th, 39th, 59th, 2-60th, 63rd, and 92nd; 4th Bengal Cavalry, the Guides, 10th Bengal Lancers, 18th Bengal Cavalry, 3rd Madras Cavalry, 3rd Bombay Cavalry, four companies Sappers and Miners, 9th and 12th Native Infantry, 2nd and 3rd Gorkhas, Guide, Infantry, 23rd Pioneers, 28th Punjab Infantry, 39th and 40th Bengal N.I., 11th and 28th Madras N.I., and two Regiments Bombay Infantry. In all, 16,000 men and 48 guns, in two divisions of Infantry, and one of Cavalry, with three Brigades in each division, will be encamped round Delhi. It is said that Brigadier General Phayre, C.B., from Nasirabad, and Brigadier General Hume, C.B., from Jabalpur, will hold brigade commands. This appears to be the first time that troops from all three Presidencies have been assembled together in Upper India, though during the mutiny campaign corps from two Presidencies, either Madras and Bengal, or Bombay and Bengal, were sometimes brigaded together.

It appears that the arrangements for the grand gathering at Delhi in January next are to be entrusted to a committee appointed by the Government of India, and presided over by Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Davies, of the Quartermaster General's Department. The committee will set to work on the 15th October, will maintain demi-official relations with the Punjab Government, and in order to save time will communicate direct with the Indian Foreign-office on all matters pertaining to their work.

We note with regret, but without the least surprise, that the Delhi gathering is not regarded with favour by the Native Princes in many parts of India. They were put to heavy expense by the Darbars last year in honour of the Prince of Wales, and some of them entertained his Royal Highness as well as Lord Northbrook at their own Courts. They are now again called upon to proceed with a large State recinue to another State Darbar, and we understand that they will not even have a choice left them in this matter.

In forwarding to the Government of India the remonstrance of the High Court of Allahabad against the recent minute on the Fuller case, Sir G. Couper, acting Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, abstained from discussing the constitutional and legal questions in debate. But he is said to have strongly supported the Court's entreaty for a review of his Excellency's judgment respecting Mr. Leeds. The Lieutenant-Governor recorded his belief that the Court's good opinion of that officer's character and qualifications was shared by the local Government, and he expressed a strong hope that the Viceroy in Council would see fit to reconsider the special orders passed on Mr. Leeds, and relieve him from the severe disqualification for professional advancement under which he is at present labouring. We hope his Lordship will grant so reasonable a prayer.

In a letter from Srinagar it is stated that a French gentleman, M. Hermance, has just arrived at Srinagar under engagement to the Maharajah for five years, to cultivate grapes and make wine, to cultivate apples and make cider, to cultivate beet root and make sugar, and to improve and extend the higher forms of cultivation generally. Truly, Kashmir is making progress. The same informant has heard of a steam plough being actually at work somewhere up in the Islamabad direction.

THE Trigonometrical branch of the Survey Department is to be abolished; this measure is taken in order to check the somewhat extravagant and wasteful tendencies of the Survey Department which attracted Lord Northbrook's attention before he left.

WE are assured by the Pioneer that the Government of India will positively spend next summer at Simla. So much is settled, whatever hill station it may favour ultimately.

Indian Civilians appear to be taking a shrewd revenge for the annoyances caused them by the present rates of exchange. We learn that some of them are sending home small consignments of wheat, Delhi jewellery, or any other article that is likely to give them the chance of recovering some portion of the 25 per cent. loss involved in changing rupees into pounds sterling. This is a practice which the rules of the Service are not supposed to encourage, but necessity "non habet leges," and the lot of our countrymen in India is by no means enviable just now.

OWING to the abolition of the Allahabad Circle of Garrison Instruction, officers from the Allahabad Division are ordered in future to attend at Agra, as the centre of instruction. Those from the Eastern Frontier districts will join the Lucknow Circle. Now that all young officers go to Sandhurst before getting their full commission, they will not, as the Pioneer points out, require to be put through the garrison course in India, and therefore the raison d'etre for the Garrison Instruction Department will in some measure cease to exist. Of course, adds our contemporary, "we shall still want garrison instructors for the officers of the army generally, but it is probable that the next few years will see a very large reduction in the Instructional Department, which now costs India about £30,000 a year. The first step was evidently the reduction of the Allahabad Circle."

WE learn that military classes are to be formed to qualify officers as superintendents and non-commissioned officers as instructors in gymnastics and fencing at Ambala. A class of six officers will assemble on the 15th October. Classes of seven and ten non-commissioned officers will be formed simultaneously at Ambala and Lucknow.

THE Indian papers declare that the Assistant Magistrate of Dhera Dhun has disappeared from that station, leaving debts to the extent of Rs. 40,000 behind him. He is also said to have raised money on bills on fictitious persons in London. He joined the Civil Service only in November last year. Says the Pioneer—"We shall certainly be very much astonished if a name already looked upon at home as that of a brilliant and most promising critic has been so disastrously discredited as some accounts represent it to be."

THE worship of gold, in a metaphorical sense, is a religion which has never lacked votaries from the time when that precious metal was first turned to practical uses. But some of our readers will perhaps be surprised to learn that the god of so widespread an idolatry is literally worshipped, in the shape of golden coins, by a large number of civilised Hindus. A correspondent at any rate of an Indian paper calls attention to the fact that the gold and silver coins of Akbar, the greatest Moghal Emperor of Delhi, are the objects of such extreme devotion that a wealthy banker of Sabathu has a square gold coin of his day which he worships daily, and says that his father did the same before him. In worshipping it he put upon it chan-dam and flowers, and afterwards bathed it, as he did the image of Shiva. There are, it is stated, probably one hundred or more banyahs in Kangra city, who worship daily a silver or gold coin of Akbar. It must be said however that this is the highest and most spiritual form which such a worship could assume. It is not the gold, but the memory of the great name inscribed upon it to which these enthusiasts pay their homage. The reverence in which Akbar's memory is still held in India is further shown by the thousands of Hindu devotees who annually visit the tomb of the great emperor in the mausoleum of Sikandra, on the high road to Mattra from Agra. They ascend to the topmost terrace, walk round the sarcophagus, bending the knee at the four cardinal points, make a salaam to it, and, on departing, never fail to give a few pice for the use of the appointed guardians of the place, who assert that the donations are to be counted not by thousands, but by lakhs, in the course of the year. In fact, but for the changes wrought by the British conquest of India Akbar had a fair chance of being in due time regarded as another Avatar, and added to the long list of Hindu

It appears that the minds of the people about Dinapur, Patna, and the neighbourhood have lately been seized with the belief that the British soldiers have orders to decapitate any native abroad after sunset, or found in secluded places. The heads are deposited in the Masonic Lodges, and thence distributed over foreign countries, and by their means the Sarkar is accounted able to gain intelligence of all political intrigues.

So implicitly is all this nonsense believed that no native servant will stir abroad after dark, and even "respectable men of business" are said to accept the general delusion. This belief is said to represent a well-known ancient superstition, and there have been times when such terrors on the part of the people were not quite so imaginary as they are now. But the fact that even now they are ready to believe such things of us is very significant. It is said too that equally wild rumours have found credence even in Calcutta, and that quite recently.

IT would seem from a letter in the Pall Mall Gazette that. after all the improvements lately made in the drainage and water-supply of Calcutta, the sanitary state of that city betrays symptoms of a relapse in certain directions. During the last four years, for instance, the death-rate from cholera has been steadily rising again. The yearly average of deaths from that disease for the six years before the introduction of a regular supply of wholesome water amounted to 4,325, ranging from 2,270 in 1867 to 6,826 in 1866. In 1870, however, 806 hydrants, placed at intervals of 300 yards, provided an abundant supply of filtered water, equal in purity to the best London water. The death-rate from cholera at once fell to 1,563, and in the following year to 800, from which point, however, there has been a gradual and steady rise. Thus there were 1,142 fatal cases in 1872, 1,155 in 1873, 1,829 in 1874, and 1,726 in 1875; while for the first six months of the current year 1,222 deaths have been registered. The beginning of this backward movement curiously synchronises with the diminution of the water supply in 1872, when the flow was greatly checked from 11 A.M. to 3 P.M., and entirely suspended from 6 P.M. to 5 A.M. When the natives found that they could no longer depend upon the hydrants, they at once returned "for personal and other ablutions to the filthy stagnant pools of sewage called tanks." In many instances they drew their drinking water also from the same foul source, and it is notorious that milk-sellers repair to the nearest pond for the means of adulteration. No fewer than 795 of these hideous water-holes have lately been measured in the native quarters, and have been found to occupy a surface of 146 acres, the contents of which are pronounced by the official analyst to be fouler than ordinary sewage. "This fluid," we are told, "appears to commend itself to the native palate, for they not only bathe in it, but repeatedly rinse their mouths with it. The filling-in of these tanks has at length been undertaken by Sir Stuart Hogg's peremptory orders, grounded upon the urgent representations of Dr. Arthur Payne, the health officer of Calcutta. One great difficulty, however, is in obtaining rubbish, and, in the absence of better materials, the street sweepings are used, in dry weather, to form the lowest stratum, earth from a neighbouring canal being deposited upon the surface to the depth of several inches. Experience has shown that in this climate no injurious consequences arise from the use of street sweepings, even when supplemented with stable refuse. The Mayo Hospital stands upon a site thus rescued from the river side, and not the slightest inconvenience has yet been noticed by the medical men attached to that model institution. The necessity of adopting immediate and vigorous measures is strenuously insisted upon in Dr. Payne's report for April, May, and June. Curiously enough, in Calcutta, as in London, sanitary reformers have hitherto been baffled by vested rights, indeterminate responsibilities, and the restricted powers of the corporation; but Dr. Payne rightly protests against such considerations being allowed to stand in the way of the purification of the capital of British India."

WE are happy to learn from the Bombay papers that the long expected rain has come at last in Khandesh. The inhabitants of that district have had an abundant rainfall, and the alarm which was spreading all over the country has partially subsided. Prices have fallen even more rapidly than they rose; and the saukars, the great capitalists of the districts, no longer withhold their customary help. At the same time, says the Bombay Gazette—"the district has only narrowly escaped, if it has escaped, a serious calamity. A few days more, and rain would have been too late! As it is, it is too much to expect that the distress amongst the labouring classes, which was noticed so prominently in the last weather report, will at once subside, or that the season will, on the whole, be anything but a very unfavourable one. These continual failures of crops, combined with the well-known indebtedness of the cultivating classes, cannot but give occasion for considerable anxiety, when it is remembered that it is from the tillers of the soil that most of the revenue of this Presidency is drawn."

ACCORDING to the Indian Statesman the quality of Indian wheat is nearly all that could be desired. It is the admixture with lak mussur, and similar pulses, which are hard to separate from the corn, and which give the flour a bad colour, that materially reduces its value. English millers, it is said, "are rapidly learning to appreciate the value of Indian corn, and the advantages to be derived from mixing it with home-grown wheat, especially after a wet harvest. The extreme dryness of the Indian grain serves to absorb the excess of moisture in the English wheat, and produces a finer flour than that of pure home wheat. It is the admixture of other grains with Indian wheat that tells against its price, while the remedy is not clear. Pure wheat is called by the natives on the other side of India chodena piecie, but very little of it ever finds its way to the Bombay market. The wheat chiefly exported from Bombay is known in the bazaar as mundie pissie, and is largely mixed with wild dhall and grain. Pure white pissie, unmixed with hard red wheat, is what is desired; but then it is more profitable to the cultivator to mix his sowing, and the remedy is not therefosts appurents."

The Gourt-martial on Major Playfair, late Superintendent of the Hazaribash Penitentiary, has honourably acquitted him of the trivial and groundless charges brought against him by Mr. H. S. Beadon. It appears that in 1874 the latter gentleman, as official visitor, made a few short entries in the Visitors Book of the Jail. One of these entries bore a heavy blot, which Captain Playfair told the jailor to erase. A few months afterwards Mr. Beadon, whose official connection with the jail had ceased, happened to be staying with Colonel Boddam, the new Deputy Commissioner, when the book was sent in for inspection. Turning to his old notes he discovered that in one page some written, and that some other pages were altogether missing. Thereupon without further inquiry he wrote off the following letter:—

SIR,—I was thunderstruck to-day on opening the Penitentiary jail visitors' book to find that you have cut out four pages, and have scratched out from page 163 certain marginal words which I wrote in comment on your remarks on that page.

My first impulse was to report the matter to the Inspector-General, that you might be turned out of your appointment; but after giving the matter-the most anxious consideration, I am unwilling to press the matter, in your reserve to the book the pages you have cut out, and if you transmit through me copy of those remarks, which I made on the eliminated pages, that it may be forwarded to the Inspector-General of Jails. You must at the same time re-write the words which you have erased by penknife. Unless you do all this within twelve hours after the receipt of this letter, my report of the whole circumstances will leave by the evening's post for the Inspector-General.

I need scarcely point out that such an action as that you have committed is likely to cause you greater loss than the forfeiture of your appointment.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

HENRY BEADON.

The fact was, that after the erasure of the blot the words bemeath it had not been quite accurately rewritten, while the missing pages, being loose at the time, had, by Captain Playfair's order, been kept back for safety's sake. Captain Playfair -as he then was-being ill with fever, wrote back a short explanation with a request for a few minutes' interview to clear up matters. Mr. Beadon in reply declined the interview, declaring that "unless, before post time this evening, I receive copy of the remarks I made on the abstracted pages, together with the visitors' book, with all my abstracted and erased renearks reinserted as before, I shall immediately hand the matter up officially to the Inspector-General." Any explanations "consistent with truth," which Captain Playfair might offer, Mr. Beadon would forward to the Inspector-General, with such remarks thereon as he himself might choose to append. "Had I been in office"—he added—"at the time I discovered what you have done, I should have reported the case officially to Governments: Even now I feel it to be my duty to point out to you that you ought to consider fully whether you are constitutionally and otherwise fitted to retain charge of the Hazaribagh Jaila." Mr. Beadon carried out his threat by reporting Capt. Playfair for "falsifying the records of the jail," and actually procured his dismissal by Sir Richard Temple from the pestito-which he had been preferred by Sir G. Campbell. Capt. Playfair naturally demanded a court-martial, in order to chase his achievements. as his character from such a slun. The request was refused;

he was ordered to rejoin his regiment. Sir George Campbell, however, laid the matter before the Secretary of State for India, and a despatch was shortly afterwards received, insisting that Capt. Playfair should have the court-martial he demanded. The court-martial has taken place, and Major Playfair has beenfully and honourably acquitted. Mr. Beadon has also had to-apologise for his insolent and insulting letters, and, if it botrue that Sir R. Temple has been reprimanded, he has probably got no more than he deserved. Will anything be done to compensate Major Playfair for the loss of Rs. 900 or so a month, during a year and a half?

A SHANGHAI telegram of September 14 informs us that agreement has been come to with respect to the Yunnan outrage. The precise terms of reparation are unknown. But they include compensation to Mr. Margary's family; the conditions of official intercourse accepted last autumn are to be fulfilled; the commercial grievances have been rectified; the judicial system is to be improved where foreigners are concerned; Ichang and three other ports are opened. The Convention was signed on the 12th, after which Sir Thomas Wade returned to Pekin.

THE recent death of Lieut. Colonel C. J. Mead, of the Bombay Staff Corps, at the early age of forty-four, has de-prived the Indian Public Works Department of one of its most promising members. After passing through Addiscomber in 1850, the deceased officer joined the Bengal Artillery at Dum Dum in 1851, and on the breaking out of the Burmese-War was ordered, in 1852, to Akyab and Kyook Phyoo. Here, at only twenty years of age, he was selected to survey and report on the Aeng Pass, by which it was hoped to send troops from Bengal to Burmah; and at twenty-one he was intrusted with the making of the road still known as "Mead's Road." For his services he was twice publicly thanked by Lord Dalhousic. A hard life in the jungle at this time brought onfever, and at the conclusion of his labours he was compelled to return to England on sick leave. After a short rest he adopted the unusual course of entering an engineering establishment, where he made himself practically acquainted withdetails of various kinds of constructive work, an acquaintance which afterwards enabled him to show native workmen how "riveting up" and such like work should be done. At the end of 1858 Colonel Mead was again in India, where he found a new opening in the Public Works Department, first at Patna, then at Shergatty and Nagpur, and was mainly instrumental in constructing the "Nizam's Railway" at Haidarabad, and furthering the objects of the Berar Exhibition as regards the machinery department. During the last four years of his life: he surveyed, laid out, and arranged, as chief executive engineer, for the construction of the Agra and Gwalior State Railway, which included among other works the great viaduct of fourteen spans of 200 feet each, on piers about 115 feet high, to cross the river Chambal. The plans and estimates for these works have already been accepted by Government and the contract taken. He left Agra the beginning of July last on three months' privilege leave, and is supposed on the night-crossing between Calais and Dover to have caught the cold which led to his illness and unexpected death. He was gazetted Lieutenant Colonel but a day or two before he died, and he leaves a widow and seven children behind him.

It would have been a strange thing if the movement in this country against Turkish outrages in Bulgaria had not provoked a counter display of feeling in some parts of the Green Island. At Dublin the other day Alderman M'Swiney loudly declared that the English had as little regard for the sufferings of the Bulgarians in the East as they had evinced for the sufferings of the Irish in the West; for the sufferings of the Irish when the Bashi-Bazouks of English rule were murdering men, women, and children in '98; for the sufferings of the Indians during themutiny war, when Sepoys were blown to pieces from the camon's mouthly or for the sufferings of outraged mankind in Janaica and China; and were they now going to lend themselves to such a project for such an end? The Turkish atrocities were vile and villainous, but there was yet a lower depth, and if they lent themselves to this they would find the bottomless-pit of Russian rule. The Turkish atrocities! What were they compared to the horrible pitch caps of the Rebellion of '98 or to the triangles than erected at every cross-road for the execution of untried persons. Why, if the people of Ireland were to-morrow misled by the Fenians into a resister of the Scotch and English soldiers, the foreign Bashi-Bazouks who new garrisoned this country, would burn and destroy men, women, and children, as the Turkis were now doing. The deeds of that selfsame soldiers.

under Governor Eyre in Jamaica, and under officers in India, Australia, and China, presented just such—nay, a far worse—stained record of crime; but in these bygone days they had no special correspondents to report the hideous brutalities.

The Alderman's reading of history is not quite so accurate as The outrages of '98 may at least be divided beit might be. tween the rebels and their opponents, if the former did not clearly bear off the palm for cruelty. At the worst they were less ingenious and cold-blooded than those inflicted on the Bulgarians by men of a race notorious in all time for cold-blooded As to the Indian Mutiny, it is enough to reply that Sepoy mutineers blown from guns died more quickly than if they had been hanged, and that our countrymen fighting for their lives at Delhi never knowingly lifted a hand against unarmed women and children, hardly ever against unarmed men. Some cruel things may have been done in Jamaica, but nothing that could be compared with the Turkish atrocities admitted even by Mr. Baring.

THORBURN'S "BANNU."

Another of those useful local histories, of which Mr. Beveridge's "Bakarganj" was the latest, and not the least noteworthy example, has just been furnished by another Civilian, Mr. S. Thorburn, Settlement Officer of the Bannu District.* No two parts of India could be more unlike in every way than the moist tropical plains of Bakarganj, inhabited by Bengali Mussulmans of Hindu descent, and the hilly wilds and rolling sands of Bannu on the Punjab frontier, peopled mainly by tribes of hardy half-tamed Patháns, and rejoicing in a climate nearly as cool as ours for eight months out of the twelve. While both books reflect equal credit on the industry of their respective authors, Mr. Thorburn's volume is likely to attract a larger number of readers, both from the more taking character of his subject and the greater lightness of his style. As Settlement Officer of the frontier district over which Herbert Edwardes in 1848 achieved a bloodless conquest on behalf of the Sikh Government at Lahor, Mr. Thorburn seems to have made the best use of his opportunities for studying the people among whom his varied official duties have been discharged for more than four years past. A better school for a young civil officer of any talent and energy could hardly be desired; and this volume is a pretty conclusive answer to those who decry the competitive system, under which men like Mr. Thorburn challenge comparison with the best of the old school in the very points where the competitioner is supposed to be weakest. Before producing a work of this kind, the author must have mixed freely with the people he describes, must have roamed continually among their villages, and gathered from their own mouths much of the curious information which he has so pleasantly put together.

In the earlier chapters of his book Mr. Thorburn deals with the geography of Bannu and its history, past and present, interweaving with his own descriptions many pertinent passages from Edwardes's "Year on the Punjab Frontier," that lively and graphic record of events in 1848-49 which enhanced among home readers the fame its author had just before won by his dashing campaign against Mulráj. The story of Bannu under native rule is told in the same Biblical language which Arnold employed in the earlier chapters of his Roman history, and which, according to Mr. Thorburn, "closely and faithfully represents the diction of the people" about whom he is writing. Of more special interest to the bulk of Englishmen is the subsequent narrative of Bannu under British rule, from the days of Edwardes and Taylor to our own-a period of about eighteen years. It must of course be remembered that, strictly speaking, Edwardes ruled the country in the name of the Lahor Darbar, until the final conquest of the Punjab in 1849, when he himself, being destined for greater things, handed the district over to his able lieutenant, now General Taylor, C.B., Commissioner of Amritsar. For a full and interesting account of what successive officers have done for this wild frontier district, which lies between Kohat and Dera Ismail Khan, over an area more than half the size of all Wales, in the midst of hills ranging from 2,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea, we may refer the reader to the book itself. Bannu has been fortunate in the succession of able Englishmen who have hitherto ruled it, now with the gentle hand of a Taylor or a Coxe, anon with the iron sternness of a Nicholson, or the more genial strength of Edwardes himself. It is worth noting that in each case, however mild or stern the ruler of the moment, his personal character and influence was the one important factor in the results achieved. However differing from each other in temper and mental traits, they were all for one thing brave English gentlemen and upright hardworking servants of the State for another. A just belief in the impartiality of their new rulers quickened the readiness of the Bannuchis to appreciate the strength of the new rule. "The very fact that their rulers were foreigners"-says Mr. Thorburn-"was viewed with satisfaction, as it was a guarantee for an impartiality which Pathans believe is not to be found among themselves. . . Knowing that they themselves are incapable of impartiality, they naturally suppose that other Mohammedans are the same. The earnest way in which Pathans implore an English Hakim, be he even a new-comer utterly ignorant of their customs and language, to hear their cases himself, and not transfer them to a native Court, must have at first puzzled and flattered many a young assistant on his introduction to work Trans-Indus." Significant also was the stress which Taylor laid on the policy of a Commissioner's being always accessible to native callers of whatever grade. On leaving the district he placed on record how much of his early personal influence with the people had been owing to the amount of time he had then been able to spare for personal interviews, and how that influence had afterwards declined with the increasing desk-work he had to undergo.

In 1852 Taylor was succeeded by Nicholson who, "though the mirror of chivalry himself, lacked that kindly gentleness of manner and laborious painstakingness in work which so distinguished his predecessor. It seemed to the people as if the reign of love had been displaced by one of fear. But by degrees, "as his self-abnegation, his wonderful feats of daring, the swift stern justice, which he meted out to all alike, became known, this impression gave way to a feeling of awe and admiration; and the people both within and beyond the border became so cowed that, during Nicholson's last year of office, raids, robberies, and murders were almost entirely unknown." In short, notwithstanding his faults of temper, Nicholson was "the most successful Deputy Commissioner this district has ever had."

Of the troubles to which a district like Bannu is liable whether from inward or outer foes, noteworthy instances are given in the story of the campaign of 1860 against the Mahsúd borderers, and of the measures taken to put down the revolt of the Muhammad Khels, a clan of the Ahmadzai tribe, in 1870. In the chapter on "Times of Peace and Plenty" we have some happy illustrations of native ways, manners, and feelings, followed by a lively picture of Anglo-Indian life at different seasons. The subject of tenures and settlements—so important alike to rulers and ruled in India—naturally obtains a chapter to its: If, which will be found instructive and far from dry. The second part of the book opens with an excellent chapter on the social life of the peasantry, as pourtrayed in an imaginary biography of one Assad Khan and his family. This is followed by a choice selection of popular stories, ballads, and riddles;

THE OLIVE IN THE PUNJAB.
TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—A good deal has been done towards the introduction of useful economic plants into India. Chinchona stands foremost, coffee occupies a prominent position, tea is indigenous, but was hardly known to be so when attempts were made to introduce it from China, while the vast benefits derived from the acclimatisation of Indian corn, now a staple throughout Upper India, are beyond all question. But there are still many other plants that could be as easily brought to thrive there, the cultivation of which would yield results as useful as they are desirable, and your columns might assist in suggesting at least one more my thoughts have long been directed to. That is the shrub or tree that produces one of the great staples of Italy and Southern France, Greece, &c., the olive tree, Olea Europea, requiring such a soil and climate as may easily be found in many parts of Upper India and the mountainous tracts in the central and southern parts of the Peninsula. It is readily cultivated in suitable climates, and should, by analogy, find a congenial home in many parts of our vast possessions in the East. I cannot take upon myself to say that the great moisture of Eastern Bengal or Assam would suit, but yet do not see why the olive should not thrive there as well as tea; but about the districts of the North-West I have no doubt. There a cognate species, Olea Ferruginea, flourishes over large tracts of the salt range and on the hills west of the Indus along the Soliman chain; and the fact that the true olive will: flourish in the Punjab has been fully established, though not carried out to its legitimate conclusion. Plants were brought from Bombay in 1853 or 1854, and I have recently seen a notice of others having been reared success fully in the Punjab.

But it is in Kashmir especially that the olive would thrive as vigorously as on its native hill sides, and I would strongly recommend the Government of that promising valley to turn their eyes towards this important oil-yielding tree. His Highness the Maharaja is doing much towards promoting the importation of many useful plants, and there is none to which his attention could be more advantageously directed than the olive.—Yours truly,

IRRIGATION WORKS IN INDIA. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIE,—The diversity of opinion which seems to prevail with regard to irrigation and navigation works in India must be asscribed to the incomplete and, in some respects, incorrect information which the public possesses regarding the results of similar works that have already been constructed in that country. Every information afforded on such results would tend to remove some of the doubts which are now felt and expressed, and bring about greater unanimity in a matter which is of vital importance to the finances of our Eastern Empire, considering the vast sums that are involved in it. Will you allow me, therefore, to place before your readers a short account of one of the most promising schemes adopted by the Government of late years, viz., "the Irrigation and Navigation Works in Orissa."

In 1858 Sir Arthur Cotton submitted to the Government of India a report on the condition of the province of Orissa in consequence of which a series of irrigation and navigation canals, subsequently known as the Orissa Project, was undertaken by a private company, with the assistance of the Government, and afterwards bought on account of the State.

In 1871 large sums had already been expended by the Government in the prosecution of the works, and an estimate for completion was submitted for the sanction of the Secretary of State. The Duke of Argyll, in sanctioning the estimate, observed:—"The amount already expended on the works is stated at 117 lakhs, and the amount required to complete them is estimated at about 160 lakhs more; but the total net revenue is expected eventually to be at least 44½ lakhs on the outlay, and both such experience as has already been afforded by the works themselves, and analogous experience elsewhere, warrant the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate."

At a later period, the works were somewhat curtailed in their dimensions, and divided into three parts called the Orissa Canals, the Midnapore Canal and the Tidal Canal. Referring to the latest reports published regarding these works, we find that the capital expended on them to the 31st March, 1875, amounted to 234 lakhs; but we vainly look in those reports for the handsome returns promised by the projectors and supporters of the scheme. We find not only that the works have yielded no return whatever, but that their very working expenses have not been covered by their earnings, the difference constituting, at the above date, a charge on the revenues of India, to the extent of £79,700, or, with the addition of simple interest on capital, of £533,861.

In looking for the cause of the discrepancy between this disastrous result and the sanguine expectations of the late Secretary of State, we find that, while the area to be irrigated had been estimated in 1871 at 1,600,000 acres, the area actually irrigated in 1874-75 was less than 95,000 acres; and that even this limited surface was very imperfectly irrigated, although the capabilities of the Canals seem to have been severely taxed. This appears from the reports of the Canal officers. "Many complaints," says the Revenue Superintendent of the Midnapore Canal, which provides the bulk of the irrigation, "were filed by lessees, of delay in obtaining irrigation, and some of the cultivators applied on that ground for permission to withdraw their leases. Others again received the water too late, and were greatly disappointed." At Sections 20 and 22, the same officer says:—"The entire area within reach of the channel (2A) was leased for the year, but the whole of it was not irrigated, owing to breaches in the embankments which caused great interruption to the irrigation operations. . . . Great and loud complaints are made for delay and insufficient supply of water, and these complaints, as I personally know, are well founded."

That this state of things is due, not to any shortcomings on the part of the canal officers, but to the works themselves, is seen by the report of the Collector of Midnapore, in which he says at para. 28, "It will be seen that upwards of two-thirds of the entire irrigable area under the Midnapore Weir was irrigated, and, therefore, many of the channels had to fulfil almost the maximum task they were intended to fulfil."

The estimates of 1871 were incorrect, not only in respect of the extent of irrigation which the works were capable of providing, but also with regard to the price which could be obtained for that irrigation. The rate per acre stated in the estimate was 21 rupees, while that charged for the bulk of the water supplied has been only I rupee; and even this reduced rate appears to have been more than the irrigation was worth to the cultivators, or they could afford to pay, judging from the heavy arrears that have accumulated, notwithstanding the very stringent measures adopted in the collection of the water-rates. "No stone was left unturned for effecting the recoveries," says the Revenue Superintendent, at section 40 of his report. "In every case certificates under Act VII. of 1868 were filed and enforced against the defaulters by the attachment of their property and the arrest of their persons where it was urgently needed. At sections 43 and 44, the Report goes on to state: "The malarious fever" (Dr. Cutcliffe's report of 1868 has shown how our irrigation canals in some parts of India have engendered malaria), "the drought of 1873 and the cyclone of 1874 have reduced the tenantry of Midnapore to great poverty, and they have not the means of paying their It is a common practice with cultivators in this district to desert their villages with their wives and children, when they become heavily indebted; but the year 1874-75 has seen more desertions of this kind than any of the preceding years since the opening of the canals. To this is to be added the large number of deaths from malarious fever, which, I may safely say, has greatly thinned the number of our cultivators, and, in almost every village, has made one, two or more families

Thus it will be seen that not only has the Orissa project signally failed in accomplishing the purpose for which it was sanctioned, and entailed on the State a useless and heavy burden, but that, instead of affording any assistance to agriculture, it has inflicted serious injury on the agricultural interests of the province, by scaring away, or causing the death of, a large number of cultivators; and that, by the severity of the measures adopted in the collection of the water-rates, it occasioned much suffering and discontent, and probably, also, no small amount of disaffection towards the Government.

The deplorable results of the Orissa scheme assume still greater significance when the other works of the same kind, which are now under construction, are considered; and the questions which naturally arise are—"Had we not better, before sinking more money in speculative irrigation and navigation schemes, investigate anew and with the experience furnished by failure, how far the costly works in question are likely to prove more successful than the many already constructed, which have ended in disaster?" "Had we not better abandon the prosecution of works where no reasonable ground can be discovered for expecting that they will lead to a different and more favourable result?"

A somewhat similar question arose in 1867 with regard to the Godavery navigation scheme, which had been commenced some years previously upon an estimate of about £250,000, and was discovered to be so defective as to render the attainment of its object impossible. The late Sir Henry Durand, a member of the Executive Council in India wrote a Minute strongly recommending the abandonment of the scheme; and Sir Stafford Northcote subsequently addressed the Governor-General on the same subject in the following terms:—

I am far from satisfied about the Godavery works. We seem to be spending money with very little certainty of obtaining a return for it; and at this moment, when there is so much to be done in the way of really remunerative works, it seems a great pity to be proceeding with a forlorn hope of this kind. I have not yet discussed the subject with our Public Works Committee, but I am much inclined to put a direct question to your Government, which I hope you may answer in the sense of Sir Heary Durand's able minute. It would no doubt raise a great clamour if we were to suspend works of such importance, and it must not be done without very careful consideration; but if, upon such consideration, we should be satisfied that they are a mistake, we may face the responsibility, and, I think, should be able to justify ourselves. Now that we have entered upon a plan of executing public works on a great scale with borrowed money, we ought to be severely critical and even sceptical in examining the projects we should take up.

Ultimately, it was decided on going on with the works; nearly a million has been spent upon them, and the people of India have to bear taxation for raising the interest on a capital which has been suck, without producing any useful result whatever.—

Lam, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. DACOSTA.

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.

The Madras Times finds it hard to account for Lord Salisbury's renewal of the old injunction of kindliness to the natives, as if the Europeans now in India were notoriously unkind to them. We fear Lord Salisbury, like Lord Lytton, may have had his mind unconsciously influenced, at some time or other, by those good stories of Englishmen and natives which go the rounds of the clubs, and are probably often concocted there. One old friend is as well known in London as Westminster-bridge—the tale of the master who sent his servant to the magistrate with an order to pay the bearer a dozen lashes on the back, the said servant transferring the chit to an enemy of his own; but, though indubitably Joe Miller's, these tales must have a certain influence in forming English impressions of India. A curious speculation, however, arises out of the misapprehension. It is a well-known fact that thirty or forty years ago; when Europeans were very rough and ready with the natives, calling them "niggers," and chastising them at will, there was less of a gulf between the two races, less coolness than there undoubtedly How can Lord Salisbury, or anyone else, account for this? And of the two we venture to say that the bulk of the people like the old times better than the new. It may be though we sincerely hope it is not—the case that the crammer's kind of knowledge is killing whatever sympathies ever existed between two races dissimilarin colour, religion, customs, and almost everything else; and that the fruit on the uppermost branches of the educational tree is rendering the gatherers thereof discontented with us, and with their own lot. The coldness is due to almost anything, we should think, rather than that to which it is commonly attributed—the ill-treatment of the natives by Europeans. We hope that Long Salisbury sometimes reads a free translation of what the native-papers have to say on this subject. Their writings often—we night almost say always—show a feeling of a malignant character towards the white people, and this under no provocation, for if any man in India knows the advantages of English rule, and of the presence of stalwart Englishmen in the country, we suppose it must be the editor of the Native Press, whose very existence depends upon both. This is a feeling, a hostility, for which Englishmen here are in no way accountable, and it is impossible to see how it is to be over-come, for it arises from the very meanest passions—envy, hatred, malice. The coolness between the two races is, we admit, a great misfortune, and it is possible that this may be improved away in some measure by returning to old institutions and a more Oriental habit of thought than has characterised almost all the Anglo-Saxon's proceedings since the extinction of the old Company. Never were Englishmen in India more thoroughly English than they are now, and this Anglicism must, as a matter of course, help to separate us socially from a people which makes no social advances fromits side of the gulf whatever.

A LOCAL BRITISH ARMY FOR INDIA.

The Friend of India remarks that we have not only at present a scarcity of men, but are yearly experiencing an increasing difficulty in keeping up the insufficient numbers we have. The present system of enlisting is failing us at every point. To recruit a soldier to serve six years in Europe is likely to deprive India of his military services just when he is beginning to prove useful and to repay the cost of his training. To do this for service in India is to add, as we have seen, the cost of transport to that of training, and further, that of bringing him back again after one or two years, wasting time, money, and material most uselessly. Mr. Clode, in his work "The Military Forces of the Crown," observes: "It was not the fact of serving the Company instead of the Crown that made the difference between the two armies in India, but that the Indian service attracted to the ranks of the Company's Army a different class of men to that which entered the Royal Army." Precisely. Precisely. The Company's Army was popular, and answered its purpose at a cost justone-eighth of the other, which is unpopular and so enormously expensive. On the other hand, it is sometimes alleged against a local army that it is liable to deteriorate in point of smartness, appearance, and discipline, and there is no doubt a vague general impression amongst people unacquainted with India that the Company's Europeantroops were inferior in these respects to the Royal Army. To the well-informed, however, this will be known to be a misapprehen-The truth is, that as to drill there was an absence of rigidity which sometimes displeased the pedants, whose only school had been the barrack-square. The school of the Company's troops had been the field of war, and they in fact only anticipated a change which the urgencies of field service have wrought in the ranks of the British army all over the world. They sacrificed something of average precision for the sake of superior mobility. If the "march. extreme precision for the sake of superior mobility. If the "marchextreme precision for the sake of superior mobility. If the "march-past" of the British line was a little steadier, a little more like the wall, which was their favourite type of excellence, in all the still more essential qualities for light infantry and skirmishing in broken and difficult ground, the superiority certainly lay with the local troops. Such disasters as beful the 24th Foot in the brushlocal troops. Such disasters as befull the 24th Foot in the brush-wood at Chillianwallah, and the 10th Foot in the jungles of Arrah, were quite unknown in the annals of the Company's Indeed, the well-known services of the latter iciency beyond all reasonable doubt or cavil. British army. place their efficiency beyond all reasonable doubt or cavil. But, as we have said, there is no sound reason why the whole of the European troops in India should be local. All that is really required is a force beyond the disposal of chance or of any political party which may be temporarily uppermost in England, and ignorant alike of its requirements and legitimate uses, invested with power to move it at will. For this we should enlist a force under terms similar to those offered by the company. The period of engagement should be long; the service rendered desirable by adequate pay; and the certainty of adequate pension, the provision for old age. In these days of railways the head-quarters and training grounds should be in the hills; thus the constant drain on England for recruits to supply the places of casualties by death, invaliding, and the expiration of short terms of service, could be reduced to a minimum. We could still keep a certain proportion of the general service troops also in India, and so lighten the burden of the English tax-payer, and at the same time keep up a spirit of emulation between the two descriptions of the forces for India; and we should thus gain the best possible testimony—that of experience—as to the comparative value and cost of each.

MAJOR PLAYFAIR'S CASE.

The Friend of India observes that Sir Richard Temple did not publicly censure Mr. Beadon for insulting an officer who had seen service in the mutiny and had done the State useful service for many years. He did not even quietly remonstrate with the foods young man and advise him to apologise to Captain Playfair. He was not heard to remark that Beadon's conduct was beneath contempt. On the contrary, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, one of the few Indian officials whose names are not unfamiliar in England (where his will be better known some day), for reasons that will yet be made public, dismissed Captain Playfair from his appointment for "falsifying the records of the jail." And so, if relegution to general service, which meant a loss of about a thousand a month, and a Government resolution imputing to him dishonourable motives and conduct, and demonstrating his unfitness for an office of trust and responsibility, could have ruined Major Playfair, Sir Richard would have done it. Those who know Sir Richard Temple as the saviour of famine-stricken Bengal, as one of the ablest of Indian officials, as a lover of social science and a devoted son of the Church, will be at a loss to explain his treatment of Major Playfair. Probably his honour for the sake of his name and fame will find some means of affording the public an explanation. Fortunately Sir Richard's resolution did not finally ruin Major Playfair. He went to Eugland, and his case was brought to the notice of the Marquis of Salisbury. Mr. Beadon has apologised, Sir Richard Temple, has, we hear, been reprimanded, and Major Playfair has been fully and honourably acquitted by court-martial. He is safely out of the mire, but the public has not yet got a satisfactory explanation of the conduct of Mr. Beadon and Sir Richard Temple.

A QUESTION.

'The Pioneer asks who is to finish the "History of the Sepoy War." A far easier question to ask that to answer. In his preface to the last volume, Sir John Kaye states that the work would be completed in one more volume, which would include, to use his own words, "in one continuous narrative the story of the campaign of Havelock and Outram, and the final operations of Sir Colin Campbell. This will form a not unimportant part of the next volume, which will contain also, if I am suffered to complete it, some account of Delhi within the walls, of the trial of the King and others implicated in the slaughter of our people, a history of the Central Indian campaign, under Sir Hugh Rose, of later events in Agra and Rajpootana, of the risings in Western India, of affairs in the Deccan, and of the general pacification of the country; concluding with a chapter on the fall of the East India Company, the Proclamation of the Queen's Government throughout the country, the remedial policy of Lord Canning, and the manner in which our promises and pledges given in the day of danger have been, in the day of safety, fulfilled." To the universal regret of those who knew him personally, and of those who knew and admired him for his writings, Sir John Kaye has not been "suffered to complete" his labours; and it remains to be seen whether his brother, General Edward Kaye, of the Artillery, to whose assistance the historian was so much indebted for his account of the fall of Delhi, will come forward and undertake the task. It will be no slight undertaking, but it is hard to believe that the record of a time in which the active and daring bravery of Englishmen was only equalled by the patient heroism of Englishwomen, can be allowed to remain a fragment.

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, Aug. 26.—It is a comfort to have something new to talk about instead of that everlasting topic, Simla gaieties, and "the Imperial assembly" at Delhi is quite a godsend to conversational people up here. They had got tired of speculating about the fancy people up here. They had got tired of speculating about the fancy ball dresses, and the coming theatricals was a pretty well worn-out subject. Faute de mieux, they had actually been discussing sermons. Perhaps the article in the July number of Macmillan may have given the turn to conversation, and people have begun to wonder why dull sermons are so common. Change the form of the question and ask why good sermons are so rare, and the answer will perhaps throw some light on another question, "Why can't we get a Bishop?" To men of talent and ability the Church at home has openings and apportunities which few would willingly relinquish. But happily there are a few who, devoid of selfish interest, possess a missionary zeal and a love of enterprise, and to these few we owe more than can easily be repaid. But, speaking of the usual style of preaching in this country, we cannot term it anything else than dull. However, dull sermons are not lively topics, so I must tell you about the "Imperial assembly." We are debarred from using the word Durbar. Before the Grand Master of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, the Viceroy and Governor-General of this mighty dominion, in the presence of a mighty throng of Governors, Lieutenant-Governors, Chief Commissioners, Native Princes and loyal subjects will the proclamation be sounded forth, and the Queen of England will be henceforth the Empress of India. The grand assembly, which in its magnificence will out-rival the Field of the Cloth of Gold, is to be held on January 1st. The political significance of the event, the diplomatically chosen stage, the characters in this the principal act in the drama of India's history, the wording of the Imperial Proclamation, the very title of the Assembly, will arrest the attention of those who gaze at passing events in the camera obscura of past history. The account of Ranikhet is, we hear, to be painted in gay colours. Of course its proximity to the Nepaul borders is in the eyes of sportsmen a great recommendation. At all events, if Simla is to be the seat of Government, something must be done both to render the water-supply greater and the sanitary arrangements better. Everyone is hoping that this slight break in the rains may continue. In fact, as we are now over the average, there is of course a chance that the rains are at an end. But, of course, this is not to be expected, and certainly not to be desired, as in the end the consequences might be serious, and the fate of the crops in such a case would be melancholy, to say the least.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

TYPHOID FEVER AT PETERHOFF.—Two of the Viceroy's servants are said, by the Simla correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, to be suffering from typhoid fever at Peterhoff.—Englishman, Aug. 30.

DEATH OF MR. TURNBULL — The Agra paper reports that Mr. Turnbull, district Superintendent of Police, died of cholera, at Rawul Pindee, on the 23rd August.

MISSING OF AN EMPLOYE.—We regret to hear that Mr. Robinson, an employé in the Accountant General's office, has been missing for a fortnight, when he visited Shahdera, from whence he did not come back. His friends are therefore in some anxiety about him.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 29.

THE KIRKEE GUNPOWDER FACTORY.—The pump and press-houses of the Kirkee Gunpowder Factory, which some little while ago were blown up, have been rebuilt at a cost of Rs. 11,031; about Rs. 670, that is, under the estimate. The six small arm ammunition magazines too have been finished, as well as a gun range for proving powder. The manufacture of a second set of retorts for preparing charcoal and certain improvements to the powder magazine are still in progress.—Pioneer, Aug. 29.

A Double Attempt at Suicide by a Soldier.—We hear from Simla that a gunner of the battery of artillery at Jutogh, named Williams, attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself the other day; he was discovered and taken down in time to save his life. The man had made further preparations to fulfil his intention of leaving this world, by loading his rifle, which was found on a table in his quarters.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 31.

FIREWORKS AT DELHI.—A Calcutta paper learns through a private telegram from London that Messrs. Brock and Co., the eminent pyrotechnists of the Crystal Palace, have been engaged by Government for a magnificent display of fireworks at Delhi, on the occasion of the Empress's Proclamation on next New Year's Day. Should there be a public demonstration in Calcutta on the same occasion, of which, however, we have heard nothing, Messrs. Brock and Co. will probably be impressed into service for the local exhibition also.

FRONTIER NEWS.—An engagement has taken place between Amanool Moolk, the Chief of Chitral, and Rahmut-oolla Khan, the Chief of Dheer, in which the latter was beaten and routed with heavy loss. It is stated that about 1,500 men were killed and wounded on both sides. The Afreedees of the Khyber and Kohat hills continue their preparations for laying in stores of grain, &c., in anticipation of a British advance against them during the ensuing cold season. The Soonees and Sheas have had another fight with indecisive results.—
Indian Public Opinion, Sept. 2.

The Death of Mr. F. R. Scarlett.—It is with deep regret that we announce the death, at noon this day, of Mr. F. R. Scarlett, who was so well and generally known and esteemed in the Punjab. Mr. Scarlett came to Lahor twenty-two years ago, and by his talents and industry, and unaided by interest of any kind, raised himself to the highest post in the Punjab commission that could then be attained by an uncovenanted officer. He was the father of the local bar, and but for the ill health from which he suffered of late years, would have continued to be one of its leading members and brightest ornaments.—Indian Public Opinion, Aug. 31.

TROOPS FOR PENANG.—The 74th Highlanders are not unlikely, after all, to be sent on to the Straits. Early in the year they were placed under orders for Penang, where it was proposed that they should relieve the 1st battalion 10th. Later on, the order preparing them for removal from Malta was countermanded, and the 2nd battalion 3rd Buffs were directed to be prepared for service in the Straits. Again a change is proposed, and there is a talk of the Buffs being sent to the Cape, and the 74th proceeding in relief of 10th to Penang. No final orders are yet issued, and other arrangements still may be made.—Civil and Military Gazette.

The Proposed Tramway.—The works in connection with the construction of the proposed tramway on the Strand-road by the Port Commissioners are being pushed on with vigour, and will, it is presumed, be completed in November next. The proposed line will extend from the terminus at Chitpore to Kidderpore. There will be, it is believed, some three stations along the length of the line, viz., one at Chitpore, the other at Kidderpore, and another in the vicinity of the Custom-House or the Armenian Ghaut. Separate accounts relating to the tramway are to be kept.—Indian Daily News, Aug. 23.

THE IMPERIAL ASSEMBLAGE AT DELHI.—The Government of India have appointed a committee, consisting of Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Davies, an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and an officer of the Foreign Department, to commence operations for the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi to be held on the 1st January. The committee will meet on the 15th October next, and, in order to save time, they are instructed to communicate direct with the Foreign-office in regard to matters connected with the Imperial Assemblage. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is also to be kept fully informed demi-officially of all the proceedings and doings of the committee.—Pioneer, Sept. 6.

Suicide of a Soldier of the 15th Hussars.—A correspondent

SUICIDE OF A SOLDIER OF THE 15TH HUSSARS.—A correspondent at Mirat writes to the Himalaya Chronicle:—A very sad case of suicide occurred in the 15th Hussars; a trooper, named O'Brien, took his carbine, sat on his bed, placed the muzzle in his mouth, pulled the trigger, and shot himself dead. I believe he had threatened to do this before, and his ammunition was taken from him, but he managed to steal a round from one of his comrades to do the deed very quietly, although the bungalow must have been nearly full at the time, for it was near roll call; but the men, believing that he had no ammunition, took no notice of him till they heard the report.

The Drowning of A Soldier.—A melancholy affair occurred at Dinapore on the 19th inst. A private soldier of the 109th Foot, named Van Horseigh, who was under medical treatment in the regimental hospital, threw himself, or accidentally fell, into the river Soane, which runs close to the hospital compound. His body has not yet been found, and from the swollen state of the river, which is full of alligators and fish of every kind, it is improbable that it ever will be. The unfortunate deceased, who originally belonged to the British German Legion raised during the exigencies of the Crimean War, is said to have been well connected in Germany, and was much respected by his comrades of the 109th. No cause has been assigned for his drowning himself.—Decean Herald, Aug. 29.

REDUCTION IN THE RAILWAY ENGINEERING STAFF.—We are informed that the reduction in the Railway Engineering Staff, mentioned recently, was decided upon by the directors of the Company in London several months ago, Mr. Leslie therefore could in no way have brought about the reduction. Regarding the question of pensions for railway servants, the whole subject has repeatedly, time after time, been urged upon the directors—who, not to speak of pensions—refuse even to allow old servants when retiring from illness, or old age, the boon of a month's pay for every year's service. The Board has decided to "consider each case on its own merits," but will not be bound in this matter by any rule. When the company do give a gratuity, it has to be wrung from them in the form of a favour or compassionate grant to a broken down servant.—Indian Daily News, Aug. 22.

FLOODS AT NAGPUR AND KAMPTI IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.—We have been favoured with the following extract from a private letter, dated Nagpur, Sept. 5:—"My dear ——, Just a few lines to tell you that there has been a disastrous flood in Kampti. It rained all day Sunday, Sunday night, and Monday, and the rain would appear to have been very heavy to the westward of Kampti, as the river has swollen, and the Gora Bazuar washed away. It is reported that about 1,500 lives are lost, but this may be over the mark. The bridge near the church is washed away. The flood extended as far as the Post office. * * * I hear since that the Post-office is down to the ground. Many who were saved have escaped as by a miracle. The families of the soldiers were taken away on elephants. Colonel M— went yesterday, but was stopped where the bridge used to be near the church. He then went on to the 'circular drive,' but could not get into the station; the water was too deep, so he had to return, and he has gone to-day."

An Execution.—We reprinted from the Darjeeling News a short time since a somewhat sensational account of an execution at that station. The real facts, as furnished us by an eye-witness, are as follows:—The execution was conducted by Dr. Purves, the Superintendent of the Darjeeling Jail, in the presence of the Assistant Commissioner. The rope used was the strongest procurable in Darjeeling, and had been twice tested—once on the evening of the 11th, and again on the morning of the 12th; but, in order to provide against the possibility of accident, as the prisoner was, for a pahariya, a heavy man, a second, or check, rope was used, in addition to the ordinary single one. The fall allowed was a few inches over three feet. The drop worked perfectly; but, from some unknown cause, both ropes broke, one after the other, as the man fell. His neck was broken, or dislocated, by the fall, and death was instantaneous. To comply with the High Court orders, it was thought necessary to suspend the corpse for the customary hour. This was done, the original rope being used, and not a fresh one. The delay between first and second suspension was less than five minutes. No spectator was allowed within 200 yards of the scaffold.—Englishman.

THE WEATHER AND CROPS.—The reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the weekending 31st August state that the rain has fallen in fair quantity throughout the Madras Presidency, and prospects have improved. In Mysor slight rain has fallen, and though it is still very deficient there is some improvement in the condition of the crops. There has been general rain in Sind, and the river is high; some damage to the khurreef crops from floods is reported in Shikarpur. In Guzerat abundant rain has fallen, and in Khandeish and Nassick good falls have much improved the prospects of the autumn crops; in the Deccan districts and the Southern Mahratta Country the fall has been scanty, and more rain is much required, especially in the latter tract. In the Central Provinces and Berar the rain has been general and abundant, and prospects are very good. Good rain has also fallen throughout Central India, and reports are favourable. Rain is reported, with much improvement in prospects, from most parts of Rajpootana; Ulwar is the only State where a deficiency of rain is complained of. In Bengal the fall has been generally moderate, being lightest in Behar, and the Bhagulpur division; reports are, however, favourable. In Assamthere is a break in the rain, and prospects are good. Throughout the North-Western Provinces and Oudh but little rain has fallenduring the week; in most places more is required, though in Benares the break appears to be beneficial. In the Punjab only showers are reported, except at Jullundur and Peshawar—prospects are good.

A SPLENDID NECKLACE.—It has been said by an eminent mineralogist, Professor Tennant, that "one of the common marks of opulence and taste in all countries is the selection, preservation, and ornamental use of the gems and precious stones." To no country of the world does this remark apply with greater truth than to Hindustan. With the Indians the love for gems has become a passion, so much so that, amongst the wealthy, the possession, use, and safe custody of valuable jewels are objects of the first importance. An example of the extent to which this love of jewels may be carried, where expense does not stand in the way, has just engaged our attention. We have been favoured with an inspection of a necklace of diamonds, manufactured by Messus. Hamilton and Co., the well-known jewellers of this city, to the order of his Highness the late Maharajah of Puttialla. It is composed of a collection of fine white diamonds, all very large, and some from an inch to an inch and a half in breadth. The setting of the necklace is, of course, of gold, and each large stone is surrounded by a border of dazzling brilliants, producing an effect, if the ornament is moved about before one's eyes, as if the large gems were playing at lightning with each other. We are quite prepared to believe, what we are told, that there is not an ornament of like magnificence and value in all India; yet Messrs. Hamilton and Co. inform us that it is only the lower portion of a necklace, the upper half of which they delivered to the late Maharajah on the occasion of his last visit to Calcutta. We should add that the large diamonds are the property of the Puttiala State, the smaller brilliants, and the setting, the workmanship of which reflects the highest credit on Messrs. Hamilton and Co.'s skill as jewellers, having been supplied by their firm. The ornament is far too large for the infant occuby keeping, and the little prince may yet have the honour of wearing it at some future time in full durbar before a Viceroy of India. We understand that the necklace has been placed in Messrs, Hamilton and Co.'s show-rooms on public view, by the special permission of his Excellency Sardar Deva Sing, President of the Council of Regency of Puttiala, after which it will be despatched to Puttiala.—Englishman, Aug. 23.

THE CASE OF GUNNER BUCKLAND .- Coming almost immediately after the Fuller case, the charge against William Buckland, a private in the F-11th Battery of Royal Artillery at Saugor, of causing the death of a native, has an unusual interest. It seems that the unfortunate gunner had, three days before the melancholy event, been discharged from hospital, where he had been suffering from a severe and almost fatal attack of cholera. Early on the morning of the 19th, while still on the convalescent list, he suddenly got up from where he had been sleeping and attacked two punkah coolies. who were lying asleep in the verandah, one of whom died immediately afterwards. The evidence, European and native, as to the exact nature of the assault, is discrepant. A fellow-gunner states that Buckland struck the deceased a "backhander" on the side; on the side; one of the natives present at the time, that he merely pushed the sleeping man with his foot; but a second native deposes that both the deceased and himself were fiercely kicked on the side while they lay asleep on the ground. The unfortunate man died almost immediately after the blow was given; and the medical testimony places the fact beyond a doubt that the deceased died from rupture of the spleen—which was diseased and enlarged—caused by external violence, such as a blow with the fist or a kick. The post mortem examination also disclosed the fact that the deceased was at the time of his death suffering from phthisis in an advanced stage, and hanging on to life by a mere thread. In all probability a severe blow on any other part of his body would have proved equally fatal. The gunner, in his answer to the charge, states that he had no intention of using violence to the punkah coolies; that for several days he had been kept isolated, and that on the morning in question he went out into the convalescent-ward verandah to cause some one to go and fetch his medicine. The military Court of Inquiry, which was assembled immediately after the event, recorded its opinion, on hearing the evidence, that no violence was used; but the matter was handed over to the civil authorities. The gunner, as we noted in a Izbe issue, was, on the 16th instant, committed by the Cantonment Magistrate of Saugor to the Court of Sessions, under a charge of wokintarily causing hurt (Section 323)—the same section under which Mr. Fuller was punished by the Assistant Magistrate of Agra.

DEATH OF THE POSTMASTER OF BANGALOR.—The death is reported at Bangalor, on Tuesday morning, Aug. 29, from fever, from which has had been suffering for the last eight or ten days, of Mr. Oliver, Postunaster of Bangalor. He had served in the Postal Department apwards of thirty years, and has been entitled to a pension for some time past.

BURMESE COURTSHIPS.

A few days ago we gathered from the Rangoon Gazette some account of a Burmese poosy, and contrasted the capacity of these people for simple enjoyments with the jaded, joyless ennui that is the outcome of our Western culture. Since then, another number of the Rangoon Gazette gives us an account of a Burmese courtship, which is something so utterly opposed to our notions of propriety and the fitness of things, and so generally happy in its results, that we of the cultured, with our gradually increasing tendency to judicial separations and the Divorce Court, may do well to think a little about it. Probably, of all the sad things in the world, there is nothing so said as baving to go through life in enforced companionship with some one whose ideas, sympathies, and "ways" jar with one's own. This seems almost an impossible sequence to a Burmese marriage. In that happy land, only the other side of the Bay of Bengal, young men and maidens are in nowise bound, or influenced, by the polite fiction of "falling in love" that plasters over our English precipitancy, and the utter ignorance of one another of the two contracting partie to a marriage. If a Burman bachelor sees a girl who pleas he drops in for a tete-a tete chat with her of an evening; cocorts her to the pagoda, the pooay, the boat race, or whatever tamasha may be on hand; and is the companion and comrade of her everyday life, untroubled by chaperons, and unfettered by conventionalisms Mrs. Grundy. He thus learns something of her character and likings, and, equally she, of course, discovers whether there is any chance of compatibility between them. She is very frank, and, if, after evincient probation, either party is not assured of this, the two part company, without reproach from the society they move in; and, after a while, they do discover, each his, or her, affinity, and marry, and are happy. How many English people will dare the scandal of breaking off an engagement once made public? What reasonable prospect of happiness can there be in nineteen Anglo-Indian marriages out of twenty? A man rushes home on six months' furlough; meets at a garden party, or a ball, some girl he is taken with; courts her seciety; and does, it may be, see her very often, in one way or another; but it is always, more or less, in the glare of society, subject always to Mrs. Grundy's constraints and conventionalisms. The girl is, consciously or unconsciously, always en grande tenue, never quite natural; neither is he; and, when the two get married, they know no more of one another, have had no more opportunity of judging whether they can live comfortably together, than a hippopotamus and a camel, suddenly introduced into one cage, might have. It is much the same if people marry out here. Indeed, with the want of out door occupations and amusements, and the rigours of the climate, there is even less chance of marriageable young men and women arriving at any real knowledge of one another here than in England.

It is true, and it is remarkable, that, in spite of all this, Anglo-Indian husbands and wives do, as a rule, jog along very comfortably together. But it may be doubted whether this jogging along would satisfy a Burmese Jack and Jill; whether these simple children of Nature, even though they have never "fallen in love," any more than they have thought it necessary to their sweethearting to tumble down a well, are not happier in a more real companionship and communion. Beyond a doubt there would be an increased chance of happiness for married people if they could, before marriage, learn a little of one another's real character and proclivities.

And yet there are people who hold that the increased measure of freedom our girls enjoy now-a-days, as compared with twenty years ago even, is a danger and a mistake, and who fight against it. Our sympathies are entirely with the other side .- Englishman.

CHOLERA IN THE 44TH REGIMENT.—We regret to hear from Secunderabad that cholera continues in the 44th Regiment, its chief victims hitherto having been women and children. Only one m we believe, has been attacked, and he is said to be recovering. The mortality among the others has been high; out of eight women and children attacked, six have perished.—Times of India, Sept. 8.

A NEW NEWSPAPER.—Our new newspaper, the Travancore Times (the only newspaper, excepting the Government Gassite, published in Travaucore), has started at a rattling pace. The proprietors sent copies of the first two numbers to over three hundred persons whom they wished to make subscribers, with the intimation that, except the paper were returned, the recipients would be considered subscribers. In this way over two hundred names are entered on the books, though not twenty have as yet paid anything. The paper is conducted solely by natives, and with the exception of the first leader, which stands unrivalled for incoherent bombast, the English part of it is remarkably well written. The initial leader was imported to give eclat to the occasion, and its literary pyrotechnics must have afforded inexpressible delight to many of its readers.—Madras Times, Sept. 4.

BAGGING A TIGRESS.-Mr. Gordon Ouchterlony had the good fortune to bag a tigress measuring about 63 feet from "tip to tip," some time ago, at Neddiwuttum. She was stalking some sambur when she received the first shot on the head, which stunned her for a time, but recovering herself, she made an attempt to make a charge, but failed. The second shot broke her neck. She is a fine specimen of a tigress, and her photograph can be seen at Mr. Penn's. -South of India Observer.

AN ACCIDENT.—We regret to learn that Staff Sergeant W. G. Monisse, Volunteer Guards, met with an accident this morning while at the St. Thomé rifle range. Forgetful for the moment that he had leaded his rifle, he placed the muzzle on his boot for the purpose of trying the spring, when the piece suddenly went off, driving the bullet through his boot and between his toes. He was taken to Dr. Strachen's dispensary, where the wound was temporarily bandaged, and he then returned to town, to have it properly attended — Úadras Mail, Sept. 2.

.THE GOVERNOR AND THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Grace the Governor and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with their respective staffs, arrived at Bangalor this morning from Mysor, where they met with the most cordial reception. His Grace holds a levee at Bangalor at five o'clock this evening, at which all officers have been asked to attend. To-morrow the Chief Commissioner of Mysor entertains his august hosts at dinner, and on Friday there is to be a ball to society generally in honour of the visit. The Bangalor Rifle Meeting commences this day, and lasts until the 15th instant.—Athenœum, Sept. 6.

DEATH OF MR. M. COLEMAN.—We regret to have to record the demise of Mr. Michael McDowell Coleman, son of the Hon. J. G. Coleman, at the early age of twenty-six years. Mr. Coleman had not been in good health for a few days, and on Tuesday last he died suddenly from an attack of heat apoplexy. Mr. Coleman was educated in London, Paris, and Belgium, and came out to Madras seven years ago. He obtained his commission as ensign in the Madras Volunteer Guards on the 16th August, 1872, was made lieutenant on the 27th June, 1873, and promoted to a captaincy on the 6th of March last. For his many good qualities the deceased was much respected and esteemed.—Madras Times, Sept. 6.

SUDDEN DEATH.—The Madras Mail reports that the Malakoff Hotel was thrown into a state of confusion on Tuesday, Aug. 29, by the sudden death of a European, named Henry Whelpdale, a railway overseer, lately returned from England, who had been residing for some time in the hotel not in a very good state of health. Deceased is said to have gone to bed on Monday night, Aug. 28, as usual, and when the servants went to his room on the following morning they found him on the floor quite dead. The coroner's inquest, held over the body in the course of the day, returned a verdict, on the evidence of the apothecary who dissected the body, that the deceased had died of apoplexy. His effects, amounting, it is said, to upwards of Rs. 8,000, were taken charge of by the Administrator-General.

H. H. THE MAHARAJAH.— The young Maharajah, remarks a correspondent of a Madras contemporary, is very well. He has already perceptibly benefited from the recent change of guardians. Captain Wilson, the "Political Agent and Tutor" to his Highness, who has succeeded Colonel Malleson, is as popular as the latter officer was the reverse; and Runga Charlu, who was permitted by Colonel Malleson to obtain too great an influence over the young Prince, has found much of his occupation and authority gone. Wilson looks into everything himself, and Colonel Hay aids in affording his Highness opportunities for self-improvement by intercourse with Europeans. Polo has been introduced, and the boys who with Europeans. attend the Boyal Riding-School promise to become good players. His Highness rides well, and has a good seat on horseback. He has an engaging manner, and when he has overcome an impediment in his speech, that he probably caught from Colonel Malleson, he will have a good address.—Bangalor Examiner, Sept. 2.

THE WRECK OF THE "MALACCA."-The B.I.S.N. Company's steamer Malacca, lost last week off Sonapore, seems to have been on her way to take up her position on a new line between Colombo and Tuticorin. The directors contemplate the introduction of very low rates for gangs of coolies similar to the railway fares for the same class of passengers; and a Colombo paper has no doubt that if this be adopted they will succeed in diverting the present stream of immigration from the Manaar line via the north road, to Colombo, where the railway to Candy will convey them upwards at extremely low rates. In this way a gang of Tamil coolies may be brought from their district by railway to Tuticorin, thence by steamer to Colombo, and on to Candy by rail, the entire journey being performed in four or five days instead of as at present, on foot, in as many weeks. The immigrants will have the double adwantage of being taken to their work in less time, and free from all fatigue and extortion by the way.—Bombay Gazette, Sept. 1.

THE TRADE OF MADRAS.—In the month of July the total value of goods imported into Madras was Rs. 23,86,583, exclusive of treasure, valued at Rs. 1,17,309. The quantity of grey twist imported was 517,684 lbs., valued at Rs. 2,97,993; 203,030 lbs. dyed twist, Rs. 2,30,893; grain valued at Rs. 1,77,566 for 45,566 cwt.; ice, Rs. 74,480 for 582 tons; metals, wrought, Rs. 1,62,816 for 1,000 tons; piece-goods, cotton, and linen, Rs. 6,89,889 for 151,214 pieces; silk, Rs. 74,436, the value of 15,308 lbs.; spirits, Rs. 53,347 for 5,937 imperial gallons; stationery, Rs. 20,327 for 4,961 reams; timber, Rs. 1,06,720 for 1,370 tons. The total of exports was valued at Rs. 33,80,106. The cotton shipped in the month was valued at Rs. 13,41,660 for 59,895 cwt.; coffee, 3,798 cwt., valued at Rs. 1,13,945; hides and skins, Rs. 10,75,318 for 43,759 corges; indigo, valued at Rs. 4,83,539 for 2,475 cwt.; oils, Rs. 31,716 for 2,090 cwt.; piece-goods, cotton, and linen, Rs. 1,23,886 for 1,697 corges; seeds valued at Rs. 13,729 for 4,030 cwt.; bees' wax, Rs. 7,047 for 90 cwt.; grain, Rs. 3,393 for 978 cwt. Private treasure exported was valued at Rs. 1,51,340 in the month.— Madras Standard.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM POISONING.—The Bangalor Spectator tells the following story of what that paper seems to think is an attempt to poison some troopers:—We learn that four privates of the C Troop 14th (King's) Hussars narrowly escaped being poisoned on Monday, Aug. 28, under the following circumstance. When dinner Monday, Aug. 28, under the following circumstance. was served out to the troop at two o'clock in the afternoon that day, one of the men observed that the mutton soup and stew (which were cooked in an earthen vessel) had a greenish colour, and three comrades who followed to take away theirs from the cook-house noticed the same. Suspecting that the food contained poison it was shown to Troop Sergeant-Major Thompson, who fortunately happened to visit the cook-house at the time. The soup and stew were taken to Dr. Barrow, of the regiment, to be analysed, and he found them to contain some sediments of sulphate of copper, and was of opinion that there was a sufficient quantity of poison in the same to have killed one half the troop. On this having come to the knowledge of Major Arbuthnot, commanding the corps, he handed over the eight cooks and ten table boys of the A, B, and C troops into the custody of the police at Ulsoor Station, where after being detained a few hours, they were released, as there was no evidence to prove which of the cooks or the table boys had mixed the poison with the soup and stew. The food of the privates of the above mentioned troops is generally cooked in one cook-house, and it was therefore suspected that the cooks as well as the table boys must have known something about the poison found in the food of the C troop. The two cooks and two table boys of the latter troop have been dismissed.

FINE ARTS EXHIBITION AT POONA.

Poona, Aug. 26.—This Exhibition is the best we have had for one years. There are 136 water-colour paintings and sixty-four l colours. The list of water-colours includes, however, some some years. oil colours. drawings in black and white. In the first room the oil paintings are arranged, and the show is on the whole very good.

The largest picture in the room, No. 1, is called "On the Way Home," a three-quarter length figure of a native woman with a child, which she is about to lift up and place on her hip. She is well drawn, but the picture is anything but pleasing. A basket on her head contains a large raw plaintain leaf, and a dirty yellow lota; the sky is a cold northern blue, and the landscape has no Indian colour in it. In spite of the good painting of the figures, there is absolutely no charm in the painting. No 2, by the same artist, which has taken the prize for the "best figure painting in oil or water-colour," is much more pleasing, but there is a pretty affectedness in the expression which is unusual in a native child; it appears to have put on the portrait-sittees' simper. The name of this is "Red Cap" (Mahratta study).

of the picture is not pleasing.

The execution is good and careful in all the paintings from this hand, but the arrangements of the figures and the back grounds are harsh and out of tune. The paintings are good enough to bear rather stronger criticism than one would be inclined to give to a lady artist, if she were not so good as this one undoubtedly is. The prize was well deserved, and hers are the best figure-paintings in the Exhibition. The work is invariably careful and good.

To continue with the figure paintings in oil. No. 44, "A Peon,"

To continue with the figure paintings in oil. No. 44, "A Peon," has taken the prize for the best sketch by a lady. This is particular to the prize for the best sketch by a lady. This is particular to the prize for the best sketch by a lady. larly well and forcibly painted, and is essentially characteristic of the class of native it represents. No. 57, a Mahratta head, which takes the Hon. Pudumjee Pestonjee's prize for a painting by a native, is exceedingly good. The painter is a Mr. Pestonjee Bomonjee; his "Head of a Fakeer," No. 58, is also good. A Madras artist, Ramaswami Naidu, has sent two good heads, Nos. 23 and 24; the latter is commended, and deservedly so. The same artist's landscape, No. 22, is much inferior to his figure painting. There is no effect in it, though the execution is careful. The natives of India have not shown much, but what they have sent is excellent, and gives great promise. Of landscapes in oils, Major Tanner's are undoubtedly the best, and his sketch, No. 14, which took the first prize for oil painting, is admirable for force and spirit, better than his finished picture of which it is the sketch. His "Partabgarh Fortress," No. 11, is a beautiful bit of painting, and his sketches are Fortress," all good.

His picture, "Katru Nuddu," Kashmir, which took the prize for the best landscape in oils, is not so good as some of his others. The distance is admirable, but the water and parts of the foreground are very inferior. There is an air of pretension about this one which is absent from his sketches.

Mr. H. P. LeMesurier's "Bits along the Line," No. 16, are very good of their kind, but it is a pity to stop at "Bits" when there is power to do something more.

Nos. 28 and 29, by a lady artist, are well executed, but there is too much formality in the arrangement of these pictures, and a good deal of hardness in the foregrounds. They are wanting in colour, deal of hardness in the foregrounds. They are wanting in colour, and need "pulling together."

No. 40, "On the Tir Pangal Range," by another lady, is good, and is commended; and No. 35, "On the River," near Tanna, by Major Kerr, is an effective little sketch of a boat in full sail. There are several of Mr. Louis Frank's, but they are rather raw, especially in the greens, and there is a want of handling about them which makes them rather insipid. The rest of the oil paintings differ a good deal in merit, but many of them show promise, and the painters of them can see some very good examples to follow in Major Tanner and some of the lady artists.

The water-colour painters are, as usual, in greater force than the oil painters.

To begin with those hung in the verandah. No 97, a black and white subject, is remarkably good. It is called "A Mahratta," and is by a lady, the painter who took a prize for oil sketching with No. 44. No. 53, "Connam Village," Himalayas, by Captain Hutchinson, is good, much better than the one beside it, No. 54, which is flat and ineffective. There are some heads, apparently in pencil, and varnished, near these, which are not good, being very wooden and expressionless and expressionless.

In the water-colour room, Colonel Baigrie has taken the prize for the best water-colour painting with No. 71, a "Cane Bridge over the Dikrung, Duffla country." It is a very good picture, and a splendid bit of tree painting, but there is something coarse in parts of the foreground foliage, an air of false colouring, which is rather irritating. No. 72, "Winter View at Murree," is very good, by the same artist.

To my mind the most artistic picture in the rcom is No. 15, 'Srinugger," by Major Pullan, which has taken the prize for best water colour, Indian subject. There is admirable harmony in the water colour, Indian subject. There is admirable harmony in the arrangement, and the picture is full of light, air, and colour.

No. 14, "Matheran," by Miss E. M. Willoughby, highly commended, is good and spirited; a very charming little sketch.

Nos. 30, 31 and 33, by Colonel Melliss, are very effective sketches. Nos. 30, 31 and 33, by Colonel Melliss, are very effective sketches. Colonel Hancock's, which took the prize for four best sketches from nature, are as good as his always are. Nos. 23 and 24, by Colonel Barton, "Street Scenes, Baroda," contains some accurate painting in the house ornaments, but the people of Baroda must be a peculiarly crippled race. There is a fakeer in one of them who probably took some pains to get rid of his knee joints, for he has none at all. The landscapes by the same artist are very poor, though there are signs of a good deal of hard work about them. His hills the randstage and the valleys are filled with cotton wool. His are like puddings, and the valleys are filled with cotton wool. His street scenes would be decidedly good, if there were no figures, as his style of painting is more suited to such subjects. No. 64, "Rogi Cliffs, Sutlege Valley," by Captain Strahan, is good, but No. 67, by the same artist, "Colico on Lake Como," is much infecier. There is a bright green colour in the smooth water, which should have reflected the colour of the mountains. The water of the Italian lakes is often green, from the yellow rocks lying underneath being seen through it, but this is only visible when the spectator is above looking into the water. No. 86, "Calladium Leaves," by Mrs. Twynam, is deservedly commended. They are well and naturally painted.

No. 93, "A Mahomedan Tomb," by a lady artist, has been highly commended. It is anything but a pleasing picture, however, though the artist has tried to draw every leaf on the trees. One of the gems of the collection is Mr. Peile's contribution of pen-andink sketches, which took the prize for black and white. sketches are admirable, and are almost the best things in the Exhi-He has a wonderful power of indicating distant detail, and his knowledge of effect is great.

Mr. Hamilton Maxwell has sent some clever sketches, and one of Mrs. Griffiths's is evidently a very faithful sketch, though there is but little effect in hers.

It would be impossible in a moderate space to mention all that is deserving of praise and encouragement, but many lessons may be learnt from the pictures of Major Tanner in oil landscape, and Mrs. Gillespie and Mrs. Whitworth in oil figure painting. Major Pullan, Colonel Baigrie, and Colonel Hancock are admirable examples in water-colours.

Sub-Conductor Charde took the Commander-in-Chief's prize for the "best composition in oil or water-colour, by a warrant officer, N.C. officer, or private." The other similar prize given by the Q.M.G. was taken by Sergeant Knight, R.E.

I hope that the admirable show of pictures this year will induce people to send and compete again next year, and that the public will do their best to render the Exhibition a success. A good deal depends on the receipts at the doors, as nothing damps an undertaking of this sort so much as financial failure.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

COTTON [MANUFACTURES.— The cotton industry must be getting on apace in Bombay, for in the past month 1,092,335 yards of grey, 472,034 yards of white, and 87,560 yards of coloured goods of local manufacture were exported from that port, exclusive of 910,921 lbs. of yarn. Pretty large supplies were shipped to Aden, Karachi, Jeddah and such places. KHANDESH.—Our correspondent at Khandesh, writing on 30th -" All apprehensions about the want of rain have There have been copious showers between Friday and yesterday in many places, as much as 2½ inches being registered between last Saturday and Sunday week. Three weeks ago prospects certainly looked gloomy, but our late rains have dispelled all this. People were beginning to despair when the long delayed rain came. The damage done by the rain holding off up to now is very much exaggerated by the Native Press. Prospects may fairly be said to be all right again."—Times of India.

A New Pension Fund for Widows and Children.—At a meeting held on the 24th August at Kalbadavie, a fund, to be called "Bombay Widows and Children's Pension Fund," was established on the basis of the rules of the Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, which works most satisfactorily. The Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund provides pensions for the families of Government servants only, but there are no means to enable those who are employed in mercantile firms, banks, &c., to secure pension for their families. It is intended for the present to fix Rs. 50 as the maximum amount of pension to be subscribed for and Rs. 5 minimum.

Karachi Harbour.—The progress made in improving Karachi harbour during the past year seems, on the whole, to have been satisfactory; the deepening of the entrance passage, hitherto the great difficulty, has continued, but the extension of the East pier is required and the removal of Deep Water Point to prevent the con-tinued accumulation by cross rush of flood and want of ebb Within the harbour the report states that on the whole the anchorages of the harbour are capable now of accommodating about double the tonnage which they could before the commencement of the improvement works. It is added that the statistics of the port now show clearly that, in spite of all drawbacks, Karachi is already proved to be suitable for an extensive trade in shipping of large tonnage at all seasons of the year.

GALLANT CONDUCT.—On the morning of the 29th Aug. (Tuesday) those who were affoat may remember the very fresh, strong, and at times, fitful breeze that was blowing. In one of the gusts a passenger tony, coming across apparently from Oorun, capsized some distance from the P. and O. s.s. Deccan, and the three occupants, one a passenger, were tossed into the sea. The danger these poor fellows were in gave good cause for anxiety, for, apart from the strong breeze blowing at the time, the sea was choppy and the tide ran like a mill-race. The second officer, Mr. Calcott, without a moment's hesitation, lowered the jolly-boat, and, with the assistance of two plucky British tars—Quartermasters Pope and Davis—succeeded not only in saving the lives of the three natives, but also the boat. Bravery and manliness carried out in this quiet and unobtrusive manner deserve the very highest commendation .- Bombay SUICIDE OF A SOLDIER.—On Monday morning, the 28th inst., between the hours of four and five o'clock, Private Patrick Murray, of her Majesty's 66th Regiment, stationed at Ghorepoorie, committed suicide by shooting himself with his own rifle whilst on sentry on the canteen of the same regiment. An inquest was held on the body by the cantonment police. The jury's verdict was that the deceased committed suicide by shooting himself with a rifle, he being sane at the time. The deceased was posted on sentry duty at the canteen at four o'clock in the morning. About half an hour afterwards he must have loaded his rifle, attached a piece of string to the trigger and fixed it to his right foot, the muzzle of the rifle being held in his mouth when he pulled the trigger, as the left side of his face was completely blown away. We regret to say that this is the se-cond case of self-destruction which has occurred at this station this month; the previous one, which we recorded in this paper, was that of a soldier of her Majesty's 2-15th Regiment in a somewhat similar manner.—Poona Observer, Aug. 31.

PARTIAL DESTRUCTION OF THE NARBUDA BRIDGE.—(SURAT. Sept. 7.)—The Narbuda bridge is about 4,100 feet long, and nearly 1,500 feet out of this length have been washed away. It is expected that through communication will be restored to-day by means of steam-launches, which are to be used for passengers alone. The flood in the Narbuda is said to be the highest ever recorded. The Taptee bridge is now very shaky and the Mahee bridge is also reported in danger. The waters in the two rivers are unusually high. Jehangierjee, the way inspector, and Rozario, the shunting master, were both picked up in the Narbuda by a fisherman's boat, but they are unconscious and in a precarious state. The inspector of bridges, Mr. Pestonjee Framjee, is still missing, and there are very few chances of his turning up again. The special train which left Bombay yesterday arrived near the Taptee bridge in good time, but the railway officials in charge could not venture to pass it over the bridge without great preactions. The engine and one or two carriages were very carefully worked over the spans, but the officials crossed the bridge on foot.—Times of India Correspondent.

NEW DOCK FOR BOMBAY.—There are, we learn, some prospects of another dock being built in Bombay. Mr. Lestock Reid, the Commissioner of Customs, and Mr. Jervis, the Superintendent Preventive Service, visited the several wharves of the Mazagon Company on Monday last, and were shown over the extensive bunder by Mr. Atts, the Traffic Manager of the company. After come conversation with Mr. Atts they left the bunder. We do not know the purport of that conversation, but it is rumoured that tenders will soon be invited for the "Nursey Dock." We understand that no dock dues will be levied, the exclusive object of the promoters being to attract traffic to their bunder; the company will be content to recoupitself for the outlay incidental to the building of the dock by wharfage fees on goods landed on the guay. Such a scheme pay prove fees on goods landed on the quay. Such a scheme may prove a severe and unexpected blow to the "Prince's Dock," for with the company's united influence, commercial and mercantile, there can be no difficulty in bringing "grist to the mill," apart from the in-ducement of free charges. Do not schemes like these show that it is high time the Government of Bombay attempted to buy up the whole foreshore? What but destruction to the trade of this port can be the result if it is made to bear the cost of the Port Trust's ruinous competition with private enterprise?—Bombay Gazette.

THE FLOODS ON THE BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—(ANKLESUR, Sept. 7.)—Between this and the Narbudda Bridge the country is mainly under water; not much visible but tree tops and railway bank, though the river has now fallen fourteen feet. Yesterday it was two feet higher than ever before, and twentyfive spans nearest this side are clean swept away. The underscour is the sole cause of the accident, which has again proved, as it does every four years, too strong. Mails bravely carried across the water. Mail service completely restored by Mr. Cornwall. Telegraph cable can't come for a day or two. Greatest energy shown by officers. The steam launch is here, and will be floated to-morrow, after which passengers only will be passed through, arriving one steam harges from Bombay. Roads are taken to secure twenty steam harges from Bombay. Roads are being cut from the line to the river on each side, and platforms built. Shortly will be able to convey 2,000 tons of traffic per diem. The two inspectors who escaped were washed, clinging to boats, three miles down to the Broach side: the draward man could not swin. Two cooling are Broach side; the drowned man could not swim. Two coolies are drowned, but no other human loss. Broach stands high, but the lower part of the town is under water; boats in streets; no personal distress expected. But otherwise the calamity is terrible; indeed it is one of the greatest engineering feats ever accomplished in India, involving more than tifty lacs hurled out to sea. There are floods up to Ahmadabad; and the officials have just started for the Mhye Bridge, where the water has risen 45 feet. At Surat, a little village on the opposite shore has been swept away. Last night the Native Infantry lines were under water to the horses' girths, though standing twenty-three feet above the river. The water has fallen again, and the bridge is as strong as ever. The Narbudda has been fifty-two feet above the level at Mortokka. -- Times of India Correspondent.

THE REPORT ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. Juland Danvers's report on Iudian railways for the past year mr. Juliand Danvers's report on Indian railways for the past year possesses more than usual interest, owing to the circumstances of his recent visit to India. Travelling as he did by rail over the length and breadth of the land, "from Tuticorin and Beypore in the south, to Multan and Jhelam in the north," calling at the chief towns and cities on his way, and taking note of coal mines at one place, iron works at another, and cotton factories at a third, he could not but bring away with him a goodly store of new experiences equally profitable to himself and the Government which sent him out. fruits of his travels are to be found in the present report, giving life and colour to his remarks on many points of railway management, and sharpening his sense of the advantages which India may reap, and has already reaped, from the growth of a railway system worked with due regard to the wants of her people and her own means of commercial development. Mr. Danvers seems to have been favourably impressed with the areas of the sense to have been favourably impressed with the areas of the sense means of commercial development. Mr. Danvers seems to have been favourably impressed with the generally good condition of the lines he passed over, especially the Madras Railway, which, "with its light sand roadway and iron sleepers, was as trim as the drive in a gentleman's park in England." With due allowance for mistakes here and there in the matter of bridges, alignments, and so forth, he has learned to look upon the Indian railway system as "a triumph of human industry and skill." To the civil engineers of India he pays a well-deserved compliment for their skill and perseverance in carrying out such great results, with means often inadequate, in the teeth of dangers and hindrances which tried all their powers of mind and body to the utmost. He is which tried all their powers of mind and body to the utmost. He is which tried all their powers of mind and body to the utmost. He is pleased, on the whole, with the amount of station accommodation, Calcutta and Bombay being noted as specially wanting in that respect. The taste shown in laying out the stations on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, with flower-gardens and luxuriant creepers trained over the sheds, calls forth his special praise. Of locomotive stock he found a general excess, with a certain want of power in many of the engines, according to latest experiences. On the matre-garden lines the carriages are recommenced and the parties the metre-gauge lines the carriages are roomy enough, and the motion as "smooth and steady" as on the broad-gauge. The obvious drawbacks to a break of gauge are admitted, but the cost, it seems, of transferring goods from one line to another does not at the outside exceed 2d. a ton. In the way of feeder lines, as substitutes for metalled roads, a good beginning was made with a light railway thirty miles long, from Hatras to Mattra, made and furnished at a total cost of nine lakes, one-third of which, we note, was raised by local subscriptions, chiefly among the natives.

Of first importance in Mr. Danvers's eyes is the question of management. His Indian travels have confirmed him in the belief that the prosperity of Indian railways depends on simple methods of working, and fares low enough to foster the traffic which he finds everywhere ready to spring up. "Low rates and simple management"—at once careful and strictly economical—is the Government director's matchword. He has found out that natives set so much director's watchword. He has found out that natives set so much value by cheap travelling that they will break their caste in order to save their pence. On some railways the passenger fares, he thinks, for the lowest class need no further lowering; but on others the rates both for passengers and goods still tend to keep down the traffic. Mr. Danvers quotes the Oudh and Rohilkhand Company as a model of cheap and simple management. At this moment the wheat of the adjacent provinces is being sent along their line for export to Europe in larger quantities than ever, and it is reckoned that this wheat on reaching our markets will sell at a profit for a few shillings a quarter below the current prices. It is a pity, by the way, that the Central Provinces still lack the means of sending us their spare grain. The lowering of the rates for salt on the Eastern Bengal Railway have already resulted in an immense increase of traffic, exceeding 100 per cent. on the previous year. Several other of the leading companies are beginning to find their advantage in reducing the rates on the great staples of produce to the lowest possible point. Due attention has also, it seems, been paid to the comfort and proper treatment of native travellers, though crowding and proper treatment of native traveliers, though crowding and rough handling by native police and porters may sometimes be witnessed. European travellers appear to be as well cared for as the difficulties of the climate will allow; nor is any fault found with the arrangements for securing punctuality and avoiding danger. Mr. Danvers seems to have been surprised at the progress made by native servants in the discharge of duties once reserved for Europeans. His desire for more frequent intercourse between the chief officers of different companies, in order that they may compare notes on the merits and shortcomings of different lines, is amply justified by the lessons which a Bombay consulting engineer owns to having learned from a trip on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. On the subject of coal-fields he is brief, but hopeful. With regard to the State lines he found a tendency to over-centralisation, a tendency likely enough to check free action, and hamper individual responsibility. Due stress is laid on the need of making feeder roads to railway-stations, and the importance of developing the iron manufactures of India is handsomely acknowledged. With regard to the successful experiments lately made by Sir Charles Reid in moving batteries by rail, Mr. Danvers expresses a doubt whether end-loading waggons would be equally suitable for commercial purposes; but he thinks that the difficulty may be got over at some cost. The list of accidents for the past year does not seem very large on the whole; but seventy-two persons were run over and killed while trespassing on the line. It is satisfactory to learn that only nine passengers were killed and thirteen injured from "causes beyond their own control," while nine deaths and twenty-eight injuries were due to he found a tendency to over-centralisation, a tendency likely enough trol," while nine deaths and twenty-eight injuries were due to "misconduct or incaution." Of the 868 accidents to trains nearly half were cases of running over cattle straying across the line.

By the end of the last official year the total length of Indian railways amounted to 6,497 miles, of which only 768 are constructed with a double line. Of the 261 miles opened during the year, the sixty-two miles of the Northern Punjaub Railway on the metre gauge will serve only a temporary purpose, pending the construction of a broad gauge line. The works on the Indus Valley and Northern Bengal gauge line. are steadily progressing. Nearly 100 miles are added to the South Indian and about eighty-seven to the Rajputana line. Of the new lines sanctioned the Ajmir and Ahmadabad is reckoned to cost about lines sanctioned the Ajmir and Anmadabad is reckoned to cost about £6,000 a mile, and the projected line from Nagpur to a point in Chatisgarh will probably cost no more. The gross receipts are less by over £400,000, and the net receipts by £321,000 than those of the previous year, when they were largely swollen by the famine traffic. The decline would have been much greater but for the increased receipts from passengers. Three lines, greater but for the increased receipts from passengers. Three lines, the East Indian, the Great Indian Peninsular, and the Bombay and Baroda, divided surplus profits with the Government, so that the total charge for guaranteed interest was reduced to little more than a million sterling. Nearly two and a haif million more passengers were carried during the year, of whom about 97 per cent. travelled by the lowest class. The working expenses also were somewhat lower than in 1874, ranging from 38:37 on the East Indian and 47:28 on the Great Indian Peninsular, to 80 45 on the South-Eastern and 95.72 on Holkar's line. On none of the State railways have the working expenses been brought lower than 56.45 on the Punjaub Northern line, and that exceeds the average for the guaranteed railways. On the Nizam's and the Wardha Valley lines the working expenses exceeded these gross receipts. Of these last the East Indian Railway earned more than a million from its main line and the Great Indian Peninsular Railway a little less than a million. Of the Great Indian Peninsular Kailway a little less than a million. Of the State lines the Rajputana was far the most productive. In conclusion, we may quote the impressions recorded by Mr. Danvers, that the Indian railways "are conferring immense benefits on the country; that they are upon the whole in good condition, and carefully managed; that they may do more than has hitherto been done for the development of traffic, and for the increase of profits; that a decrease in the rates of some of the present charges for conveyance, and an increase of facilities, would assist to accomplish these objects: and an increase of facilities, would assist to accomplish these objects; that measures of this description have been and are still being taken; that close attention is required to the expenses of working and maintenance, in order to secure economy; that the extension of the present system, and the construction of light feeders, is much to be desired, whenever the state of the finances of the country admits of the necessary expenditure."

In May last there were 23,871 deaths in the Punjab, giving a death-rate of 16 per 1,000.

BILLS ON INDIA.—As was anticipated, the weekly allotment of India Council drafts by the Bank of England on Wednesday shows a marked improvement in the demand for these remittances to the a marked improvement in the demand for these remittances to the East. The amount of bills and telegraphic transfers allotted was 35,00,000 rupees (say£350,000), being the same as for the past few weeks. The sums taken were £194,100 for Calcutta, £107,800 for Madras, and £48,100 for Bombay; tenders for bills at 1s. 8 3-16d. per rupee receiving in full, and for telegraphic transfers at that price about 86 per cent. Last week the allotment was at 1s. 7\frac{3}{4}d. for bills and 1s. 7 13-16d. for telegraphic transfers, so that the advance in the seven days has been equal to \(\frac{2}{3}\)d. to 7-16d. per rupee, or, say, 2 per cent. The rise being fully up to expectation, the silver market was again firmer, at 52\(\frac{1}{2}\)d. to 52\(\frac{2}{3}\)d. per oz.

A FAC-SIMILE OF THE FULLER CASE.—The following is from the Indian Christian Herald:—The Bengalee draws attention to the and Christian Herata:—The Bengace draws attention to the case of Regina v. Punchanun Tantee, reported on page 77, Criminal Rulings, Revenue, Civil and Criminal Reporter, Vol. 1, as a parallel to that of Regina v. Fuller. In that case, the prisoner "having been subjected to extreme provocation by his wife, pushed her with both his arms so as to throw her with violence to the ground, and often the west down clarked her with his open hand. The and after she was down slapped her with his open hand. The woman died, and on examination it was proved that there was a woman died, and on examination it was proved that there was a certain degree of disease of the spleen, and that death was caused by the rupture of the spleen." But as the prisoner, in all probability, did not know of the diseased state of his wife's spleen, Justice Norman and Justice Campbell acquitted him of culpable homicide and convicting of burt sentenced him to and scans. homicide, and, convicting of hurt, sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Will the Bombay Gazette and others of his class tell us whether a fine of Rs. 30 would have adequately punished Punchanun in this case?

PRIVILEGE LEAVE AND FURLOUGH.—The Governor General in Council directs that the following be substituted for Rule 1 under Section 12 of Supplement F to the Civil Leave Code:—An officer taking privilege leave whose salary is less than two hundred rupees may, with the special sanction of the head of his office, receive an advance not exceeding two months' salary, and, also, not exceeding the allowances which would become due to him for the whole period of his leave on the expiration thereof. It having been found necessary to lay down a rule as to the smooth of furlength remaining at an officer's credit which shall her the thereof. It having been found necessary to lay down a rule as to the amount of furlough remaining at an officer's credit which shall bar the grant to him of furlough under Rule XI. of the Regulations of 1868, it is hereby notified, under the authority of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India, that Clause XI. of the Regulations of 1868 will in future stand as follows:—"Furlough on urgent private affairs for six months, on pay equivalent to the British regimental pay of his mank, may be granted when the officer has less than six months' furlough at his credit," &c.

COCKLE'S ANTIBILIOUS SEVENTY-SIXTH YEAR. PILLS.

GOOD FAMILY MEDICINE CHEST, with a prudent use, has saved many a life and yet we think the idea might be improved upon, and reduced to a more simple form. Take some good compound, such as COCKLE'S PILLS, as tested by many thousands of persons, and found to answer their purpose so well, may be set down as the best.—Observer.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, September 15; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, September 13; Calcutta, September 12.

THE floods on the Bombay and Baroda Railway line, which on the 5th and 6th September had risen to so threatening a height, have happily subsided. At Surat the railway bridge was unhurt, though the water rose to within two feet of the girders, and though much of the town was flooded. At Broach, however, a good deal of damage was done in the lowlying portion of the town, and the Narbada River rose to the unprecedented height of fifty-nine feet. The railway bridge there, the longest on the whole line, consisted of sixty-seven spans of sixty-two and a-half feet each, and twenty-five of these nearest the southern shore were carried clean away by the action of the underscour. At the latest mail date the line was reported again open to goods traffic. In the Mahi the water rose to forty-five feet; at Ahmadabad the floods came up to the city walls before they began to abate. Over a large part of Western India the floods had full sway for a day or two. In the neighbourhood of Kampti 500 houses have been washed away and nearly 9,000 people rendered homeless. Fortunately the bungalows are of cheap and fragile structure. No European lives were lost, and only six natives reported as missing. Between Naushera and Peshawar the country has been under water through a tremendous flood on the Kabul River. The bridge of boats and the telegraph lines were "as usual" swept away. At Attok the Indus rose forty feet. The heavy rainfall, however disastrous in itself, has averted the threatened famine.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council at Simla on the 7th September, the report on the Civil Procedure Bill was held back. Sir Andrew Clarke obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to Indian Railways. This Bill would consolidate four out of five of the present Acts embodying railway law; but it will not be passed until the forthcoming Railway Conference has had an opportunity of considering it. Mr. Hope presented the Select Committee's Reports on the Bombay Municipal Debentures and Sind Jagirdars' and Zamindars' Bills, and Mr. Hobhouse obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Land Improvement Act of 1871. for the purpose of making clear the nature of the security Government takes for advances made to landowners.

THE Pioneer learns that Government have offered to lend the East Indian Railway Company a certain number of assistant engineers from the Railway Branch of the Public Works Department. This, thinks our contemporary, "looks ominous for the hopes of further State railway extensions, and points to a general reduction of the Engineers' establishment. There is, we fear, a bad look-out for Cooper's Hill, and indeed for the service generally."

THE gathering of native potentates at Delhi will be greater even than was at first expected. The Government has reason to think that about seventy leading chiefs will attend, among them the Nizam, who is, we trust, outgrowing his early delicacy, if that be the right word to use in his case. The Viceroy will make his public entry into Delhi on the 23rd December, and the camp will break up on the 5th January, but the programme of daily events between those dates has not yet been settled. The Viceroy's camp will be under charge of Captain Dalton, of the Quartermaster-General's Department. To the field batteries named in our last issue we may add B of the 8th Brigade. The 16th and 24th Bombay N.I. are the two regiments selected from that side of India. The 20th, not the 28th Madras N.I., is to go to Delhi for the Assemblage of 1877.

CHOLERA was increasing at Rawal Pindi, and continued severe in Sialkot and Jammu. There were 308 cases of cholera in Srinagar in the week ending the 29th August, of which as many as 139 proved fatal. In the previous week there had been 140 seizures, and 63 deaths. A case of cholera occurred at the Fort of Allahabad, where a private of the 5th Fusiliers died on Sept. 9. The E-11th Battery, which went out into camp in consequence of a slight outbreak of the disease, was getting on well, and seemed free again from the scourge. At Cawnpore, besides three deaths, no more cases had been reported amongst the troops.

It is reported from Kohat that the Hassan and Isa Khéls have been included in the blockade of the Afridi tribes, owing to their refusal to give the hostages demanded by the Deputy Commissioner.

Among the deaths recorded in the latest mail news is that of Lieutenant Barter, of the 73rd Foot, who was accidentally shot through the head while out bear-shooting. Mr. Garstin, Assistant Superintendent of Telegraphs, has been killed by a fall from his pony, while playing at polo. Captain James Loch, Adjutant of Royal Artillery, died at Jabalpur on the 7th of September. The death of Lieutenant Warner, of the late Indian Navy, is also announced from Baghdad.

If a story received from Mandalay be true, the old saw about necessity being the mother of invention has just been amusingly illustrated by the Sovereign of the Golden Foot. That monarch has been placed in a difficult position by the new rule of the Indian Government, forbidding its officers to appear before his Majesty without their shoes. It is stated however by a Mandalay correspondent of the Indian Daily News that the King of Burmah has got a wooden machine, which is to be erected in the palace, "by which the nether the royal gaze, and in this manner will the Resident with his shoes on be able to approach and converse with his Majesty. If his semi-barbaric Majesty can save his dignity by such a compromise, the Viceroy, we suppose, will not care to stickle for the absolute right of his Envoy to force his boots directly upon the royal notice.

THE Railway Conference about to sit in Calcutta, as announced by telegram a few weeks ago, will be invited, it seems, to discuss the following heads of railway management:-

1. Standard dimensions.

- Continuous brake-power on trains.
   Communication between passenger and train staff and between guard and driver.
- Adaptation of rolling-stock to military purposes and duties of Rail-way servants in time of war.
- 5. Establishment of a clearing-house. Simplification of fares and goods tariff and the assimilation of systems of working as far as possible on all Railways.
  - 7. Means to promote the comfort and convenience of Railway travellers.

8. Wages and allowances to Railway employés.
9. Pensions, "Bonuses" or Provident Fund for Railway employés if any to be established and which to be preferred.

10. Training and industrial schools for children of Railway employés with a view to their useful employment in India, including the establishment of hill sanataria for the employés and their wives and families.

According to the Government resolution it is "deemed advisable to invite representatives from all the Guaranteed and State Railways in India and Burmah and from the Consulting Engineers' Department of the three Presidencies to a conference, to be held in Calcutta, probably some time in January next, for the purpose of discussing these questions, and with a view to aid the Government of India in coming to a right conclusion in regard to them." Delegates from the Chambers of Commerce in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, and from the leading merchants, European and Native, of the principal towns are invited to attend the proposed conference and to submit papers to be read at it. Further details on the subjects of inquiry will be issued hereafter, and meanwhile "the opinions of all officers, both of the upper and subordinate and of the mechanical classes, interested in any of the above subjects are freely invited, and may be submitted direct to the Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department."

THERE seems to be a curious connection between Sir R. Temple's treatment of Major Playfair and his subsequent behaviour towards one of Major Playfair's witnesses. learn from the Englishman that Mr. Winter, the jailor of Hazaribagh, whose evidence helped to clear his former master from the importations which had led to his dismissal, has been suspended from his post for six months, and thus, in effect, subjected to a fine of twelve hundred rupees, for the grave offence of summoning an archdeacon. It appears that Mr. Winter had lately erected a monument over the grave of his wife in the Hazaribagh churchyard. "The architecture of the memorial, however, not suiting the taste of the archdenoon of the discose, that functionary requested Mr. Winter to have it taken down, which Mr. Winter accordingly did. Considering himself, rightly or wrongly, to have a ground of action against the archdeacon, Mr. Winter proceeded to sue him for damages, and, in the usual course, a summons was issued, with the result of the archdeacon handing him up to the Lieut-Governor, and notwithstanding that he expressed his regret for his hastiness and apologised to the archdeacon, the Lieutenant-Governor has marked his disapproval of Mr. Winter's temerity by the severe sentence we have mentioned. Such a punishment for so very small an offence, if Mr. Winter's appeal to law can be regarded as at all a punishable offence, naturally provokes the question whether Mr. Winter could have been made to smart so cruelly for his attack on the purse of so reverend a dignitary, if he had not happened to be the jailor of Hazaribagh at the time of Major Playfair's dismissal. It may be said that Mr. Winter should have come down upon the chaplain, not the archdeacon; but six months' loss of pay would be a heavy fine even for the offence of suing the wrong man. Can it be that the strong sense of duty which impelled the Lieutenant-Governor to avenge the insult offered to an archdeacon was sharpened by a petty spite against one of Major Playfair's deading witnesses? Or are we to inferferom Sir Richard's entesselents, as displayed especially in the Bengal famine and the secent controversy with Major Playfair, that the story told by the Englishman does not fairly represent the real facts? If that story is substantially true, Sir Richard's conduct calls for some explanation, quite apart from any question of personal motives. That he himself misdoubts the justice of his own act may be inferred from his subsequent remission of Mr. Winter's penalty.

Another "case for inquiry," in which Sir R. Temple figures, is mentioned in the same paper. It appears that on March 3 Mr. Matson, a branch pilot of twenty-six years' good service, was in charge of the Duke of Argyll, when that vessel took the Governor of Madras and his party away from Calcutta; and he is accused of having intruded into Lady Anna Gore Langton's cabin somewhere about midnight. That someone intruded there is no doubt, but Mr. Matson declared his innocence, and asked for a fair trial. This was refused by Sir Richard Temple, although the evidence upon which he is condemned to a fine of Rs. 6,000 to Rs. 7,000 is said to be of the flimsiest that ever satisfied an irresponsible judge. Neither the Duke himself, who ejected the intruder, nor the ship's steward, could identify the culprit; but two of the Duke's servants and his private secretary seem to have been satisfied that it was Mr. Matson. Captain Hankin's evidence, however, conflicts with the steward's, and, on another point, with the evidence of the ship's officers, who testify to the sobriety of Mr. Matson during the time he was on board the ship, while Captain Hankin declares that the man he met on the companion ladder was drunk, and so on. Mr. Matson, moreover, is prepared to prove that he had in his possession no such garment as the intruder is said to have worn. It is to be noted that, although Mr. Matson was on board the Duke of Argyll for two days after the scandal, the witnesses against him were not then examined face to face with the accused, but, two months afterwards, swore their depositions before a magistrate at Utakamand. Mr. Matson's brother officers speak of his character in the highest terms; but witnesses to character in such cases are not worth much in the face of subsequent facts, if those facts have been clearly proven. That however is the question at issue in this case; and pending further explanation, we cannot help thinking that Mr. Matson should have had the trial for which he asked. So grave a slur on a character heretofore blameless ought not to be fastened by the summary process which seems to have been here employed.

Ir is pleasant to turn from this phase of the Licentenant-Governor's doings to the brighter one presented by his dealings with the poorer classes of his own countrymen. From the Indian Daily News we learn that Sir Richard Temple has decided upon sending to the Doveton College fifty day-scholars, the sons of poor but respectable Europeans and Eurasians. His Horour had originally intended to send one hundred day-scholars; but the scantiness of the funds at the disposal of the Bengal Government obliges him to remain content with the arrangements made for educating the smaller number. The committee of management have agreed to admit the boys on two thirds of the ordinary school fees, a portion of which will be paid by the parents, and the rest by the Government. The nomination of the boys, we are told, " is to be in the hands of the Director of Public Instruction, who will doubtless notify in due time the terms and conditions of admission. One important part of the arrangement is the power vested in the committee of excluding any who may be likely to exercise an unwholesome influence on the moral tone of the institution. This will guarantee the admission of none but the sons of respectable parents, and ought to satisfy the friends of the Deveton College that no injurious results will follow from the arrangement, as might otherwise have been apprehended."

THE Times correspondent telegraphed the following newson Sunday last:-The Government has at last expressed its views on the Exchange question. A Gasette Extraordinary published at Simila on the 22nd ult., contains a long financial resolution, which is chiefly devoted to answering the arguments of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. That body advised the suspension of the law which obliges the Mint to coin silver tendered by private persons. The Government answers that this course would inflict greater evils than the present, by giving on artificial value to the rupee. The Government admits that the substitution of the gold standard is desirable, but ways that present circumstances do not demand such a costly measure. It believes that the value of gold relatively to silver has risen, but it doubts whether the value of silver relatively to other commodities has fallen. It traces the divergence of the values of the two metals chiefly to the demonetisation of silver by several European States. The Government, while sympathising with private losses and the disturbance of trade, cannot accept the proposals made. It is advisable to avoid incurring obligations which must be met in gold, but, it being important to use State resources to develop the country, the Government will not stop really reproductive public works, and will continue borrowing for them provided such loans can be raised in India and made payable in Indian currency.

FROM the same source we learn that the Pioneer's Simla Correspondent gives an abstract of the Allahabad High Court's remonstrance regarding the Viceroy and the Fuller case. Minute of Protest, which is temperate and convincing, says the Viceroy cannot legally interfere with the exercise of the Court's judicial discretion or censure inferior tribunals, except through the High Courts. He should have instructed the Government Law officers to move the Court to repeal the former opinion of the case. It believes that death was not caused by a blow, but by a fall which occurred 200 yards off while running away. It appeals warmly for Mr. Leeds, whom it describes as an excellent officer. The Viceroy will not determine the Constitutional questions raised, but refer them to the Secretary of State for arbitrament. It will be observed by the way that the High Court confirms our own view that death was not caused directly by the blow.

OTHER items from the same quarter are as follows :-

The Bombay Mohammedans held a large meeting on the 24th ult. to consider the Eastern Question. They adopted unanimously addresses to the Queen praying her not to sanction any policy tending to the dissemberment of the Turkish Empire. The Indian Mohammedan papers express warm sympathy with the Turks.

It is estimated that the Delhi darbar will cost fifty lass. Sixty men from every Indian Volunteer Corps will attend. Colonal Walton, of the Calcutta Battalion, will command the Volunteers.

It is new stated that it is doubtful whether the Government goes to Simla next year, and that probably Lord Lytton will not go there.

General Norman is mentioned as likely to succeed Sir H. Davies as Licutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Bombay Mohammedans held a large meeting on the 24th ult. to conducting the operation were killed.

Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Akakais on the Punjab frontier have made a raid into British territory, and murdered one and wounded two British subjects.

A CALCUTTA telegram of October 5 reports that a torpedo exploded the day before while being lowered to destroy a sunken wreck in the Hughli. Sergeant Harrison and seven natives FAVOURABLE accounts have been received by telegram of the crops in Bengal, but according to official reports scarcity and distress are expected in the Dakhan and Southern Maratha country.

THE Guardian's statement that the too long vacant See of Calcutta has at length been offered to the Venerable Edward Ralph Johnson, M.A., Archdeacon of Chester, is true, and the offer, we hear, has just been accepted. Mr. Johnson was formerly a minor canon of Chester Cathedral. He was presented to the rectory of Northenden, Cheshire, by the Dean and Chapter in 1866, and was made Archdeacon by the present Bishop of Chester in 1871. "His kindliness, tact, and never-failing willingness"—says the Guerdian—" have made him very acceptable and useful in the diocese of Chester. It was only in June last that the church of Northenden was again opened, after being completely rebuilt through the efforts of Archdeacon Johnson. There seems to be an impression in this country that the duties of an Indian Bishop are at least as trying as those of a Viceroy. If so, the impression is probably as groundless as many others which prevail here concerning India.

WE note that the Times has been authorised to contradict a report said to have been current in India, that the Governorship of Bombay had been offered to Sir Bartle Frere. We certainly are not aware of the currency of any such report, however credible it might sound. The only rumour of which mention has been made in the Bombay papers referred to quite a different person, Sir H. Gordon, as a likely successor to Sir P. Wodehouse. Another report, which has containly been current in India, has been flatly contradicted by another journal, the Army and Navy Gazette. "There is not"-we are told-" a particle of truth in the report to which the Pioneer gives circulation, that Sir Salar Jung distributed large sums before he left this country to promote the restoration of the Berars." The fact probably is that his Highness spent very little money in England, beyond what was necessary to meet the expenses of a rather large household. His prolonged stay in Paris after his accident must have made a large hole in his purse; and whatever the extent of his worldly means, it was unlikely that a statesman of his shrewdness and experience would think that any amount of money lavished on private agents could help the cause he is supposed to have at heart.

THE Homeward Mail gives just prominence to a gallant act performed the other day at Boulogne by Colonel Gordon Caulfield, an Indian officer of more than forty years' service. It appears that on the afternoon of Sept. 12 a little boy of eight was watching from the harbour landing-steps at Boulogne the arrival of the Folkestone steamer, when a wave caused by the paddles of the steamer swept up the steps and carried the boy towards the centre of the harbour. "An alarm was raised and the venerable head of a bold swimmer was suddenly seen in the water, and where the boy sank the swimmer plunged and reappeared with the apparently lifeless child. It was Colonel Gordon Caulfeild, who had dived off the jetty on the instant that his attention was drawn to the drowning boy; and so prompt was his action that he did not remove even his hat, which was lost in the water. The inanimate body was taken to a house on the quay, and the usual remedies were, happily, successful. The child's brave preserver is over sixty years of age. He quickly returned home, changed his clothes, took simply a glass of water, and in a few minutes renewed his walk on the jetty. We are assured of the accuracy of the facts in JARRY. COLONEL ALEXANDER MACNEILL, C.S.I., whose death occurred on September 15, was the son of the late Col. Malcolm McNeill, of the Madras Cavalry, who was Governor of Vellor and Military Commandant of Arkot, and fell in leading the attack on Prome during the second Burmese War in 1852. The deceased officer entered the Madras Army in 1843, and became a lieutenant in the 46th N.I. in 1848. He was promoted to the rank of captain on Dec. 8, 1858, and was transferred to the Madras Staff Corps in the same rank on Feb. 18, 1861. On April 24, 1857, he was appointed Governor-General's agent in Orissa for the suppression of Meriah sacrifices and female infanticide in that province, and held the appointment till his retirement from the service, with the honorary rank of lieut. colonel, on Sept. 27, 1864. For his services in this capacity he was created, in 1873, a Companion of the Star of India. His widow was a daughter of General Sir John Campbell, of the Madras Army, who was made a K.C.S.I. for his services in the same field of humanity as Colonel MacNeill's.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

UNUSUAL interest attaches to Mr. Danvers's Indian Railway Report of this year from the fact that it gives us his impressions of the condition and prospects of these undertakings after a visit to India during the last cold season. Mr. Danvers must have been pretty well charged with information on Indian Railway matters before he commenced the expedition. His reports for the last sixteen years prove this. But to be thoroughly able to appreciate the exact bearing of various points of an administrative character in a distant land, and to understand the physical and material characteristics of a country, personal contact and ocular demonstration are almost necessary. It was not surprising, therefore, that it should have been thought wise and expedient to enable the Government Director to extend his knowledge by actual observation on the spot. The wonder is that he had not been sent before. A more accurate and complete understanding of the nature of these works and of their adaptation to the wants of the country has probably been obtained by his five months' trip than by five years of reading and of attending boards in this country.

Extracts from Mr. Danvers's report appeared in our last week's impression. They contain an account of the progress hitherto made and intended to be made with the Railway system, and present additional evidence of the immense value of such works in a country like India, rich in produce of various kinds, teeming with a poor but industrious population, with provinces separated by enormous distances, and held by a handful of Eu-"On political and strategic, as well as on social and commercial grounds, their extension, therefore, is greatly to be desired. But," Mr. Danvers remarks, "bearing in mind the present state of the finances, no extensive ramification of the rail. way system can be successfully carried out without the exercise of the utmost economy and circumspection. The lines must be constructed at the lowest possible cost, and selected and laid out with the greatest judgment." It would, indeed, be strange if the lessons taught by experience were not to bring forth fruits in the direction of economy. But the construction of future lines will be naturally very much assisted by those which are completed. One great item of expenditure in the past, for instance, was the cost of conveying materials over a country destitute of good roads. We must recollect also that considerable loss was produced by the Mutiny, and that unavoidable causes have contributed to augment the capital outlay. It is not, as some would contend, the system which is altogether answerable for a high mileage cost. Where should we have been now without the guarantee? As Mr. Crawford pointed out the other day in a letter to a contemporary, the guarantee has done what could not, or would not, have been done without it. But whether railways have or have not cost more than they ought, or whether the cause of unexpected outlay has been the system or the peculiar circumstances of the country, it is our duty, while we try to make railways cheaper in the future, to make the best of what we have got; and the problem which railway managers have to solve is, how these undertakings shall be administered so as to make them pay. Mr. Danvers's voice does not give any uncertain sound when speaking on this point. Railways in India, he argues, must be brought within reach of the people, who, "though poor, tenacious and prejudiced, soon become alive to their value, and are quite ready to use them in every possible way, whether for carrying themselves or their goods." But hitherto they have not been thoroughly adapted to the means and requirements of the masses. He accordingly recommends low rates and simplicity of management; low rates being such as will secure the conveyance of the produce of the districts through which the railways pass, which will not check or prohibit traffic, and will not discourage extended production; and simplicity of management in creating such rules for the regulation of the traffic as the natives can readily understand. There can be no doubt that the charge for the carriage of an article has exactly the same effect upon it as a tax. which, whether high or low, will increase the price. If high it may prove prohibitory; it may make it impossible to compete with the same article produced elsewhere under more favourable circumstances. In India this has happened before. The export of her sugar to this country was checked by the differential duty imposed in favour of the West Indian Colonies. And now the power of India to compete with America and Russia in meeting our demands for wheat, depends, in a great measure, upon the charges for conveyance. It would appear, therefore, to be for the interests of all parties concerned, whether the railway proprietor, the producer, the Indian Government, or the consumer, that the growth of the staples of the country should be fostered and encouraged by the lowest possible charge. The railways will benefit, for a large and improving traffic would come to them; the producer will be better off, for he will be helped to a market for his goods, and be enabled to cultivate more land; the Government will profit by additional revenue, and the consumer will gain by the introduction of another formidable competition, which will keep down prices. We are glad to find that a liberal policy is now being generally favoured by the Companies. If they continue to carry it out in an earnest, enterprising spirit, and at the same time enforce economy in the management of the lines, we shall be hopeful of as great a success in a pecuniary, as they now are in a social and political, sense.

KAYE'S "SEPOY WAR." TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In Allen's Indian Mail of 30th September the question is asked whether I am about to come forward and undertake the task of completing Sir John Kaye's "History of the Sepoy War." I may as well reply to the query to prevent any misapprehension. I should be glad, indeed, to do so, did I feel myself competent to continue the work so well commenced and nearly completed by my late brother. I hope, however, that some abler pen than my own will put before the public the fourth volume, for which, I believe, Sir John had collected material.

It is a mistake to suppose that the author was much indebted to me for assistance in his account of the fall of Delhi. It is a regret to me that I could not help him better, but I knew little of the occurrences of the siege, except as regarded my own branch of the service.—Yours, faithfully,

October 5. E. KAYE, Lieut.-General.

SILVER-V.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Six,—Sir George Campbell, at the meeting of the British Association this month, is reported to have spoken as follows:—

He agreed with Mr. Mason in taking an unfavourable view of the Indian revenue, but it was impossible to discuss that subject now. He would only say that, no doubt, great part of the present difficulty in regard to the silver exchange was caused by the fact that hitherto the Indian Government had been living on capital; and, borrowing in this country, had not needed to draw largely on India. Some people wished to stave off the difficulty by continuing this system. He must protest with all the force in his power against any such proposal, which was merely postponing a difficulty at the expense of greater difficulty hereafter.—See Times of the 9th September.

Sir George in objecting to borrowing alludes to a permanent increase in the Indian National Debt. The borrowing which I have advocated in your columns is the borrowing for a few months only, at a little more than 4 per cent. per annum, in order to avoid immediate losses to Government on the whole of their remittances to the extent of from 10 to 16 per cent. The increase of seven and a-half millions sterling in the Indian National Debt, on the plea of a non-existent famine, was an improper proceeding; but the issuing of two or three millions of Exchequer Bills in order to checkmate the secret machinations of the speculators, restore the Government finances, steady the exchanges, and save all our countrymen in India from heavy losses, would be a wise and statesmanlike proceeding.

If exchange were steady for a few months at about 1s. 8d. the rupee, a stimulus would be given to the export trade from India nearly as great as that which was caused fourteen years ago; but to enable merchants to move Indian produce to England, and to other parts of the world, a greater supply of rupees is required at Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Akyab, Rangoon and Kurachi; trade labours under very great difficulties when discount is at 13½ per cent., which high rate was caused this year by Government measures.

It is instructive to watch the enormous power which speculators now wield by means of the public press and the tele-graphs. A few thousand pounds cleverly laid out in newpapers so called can be made to yield great profits; and the whole world has been troubled on the silver question, apparently caused by a false, or, as some may be pleased to call it, an Some members of the erroneous telegram from Nevada. press continue to cry out that silver is cheap in spite of the news from China, that enormous quantities of silk and tea cannot be moved for want of it. Some writers continue to declare that the soil of India is rapidly approaching exhaustion in spite of the fact that the soil has never been so productive as at present (notwithstanding the loss of manure by the use of enormous quantities of cow dung for cooking purposes, owing to the scarcity and high prices of firewood), and that vast tracts of fertile land are still uncultivated and left in the possession of tigers and elephants. Not only are the masses in India better clothed than they have been within the past 800 years; not only do they consume more corn, oil, sugar, and spirits, but the exports annually exceed 60 millions sterling. The history of the cotannually exceed 60 millions sterling. The history of the cotton trade, of the jute, rice, wheat, indigo, tea, coffee, and opium trades shows that the powers of the soil of India, to produce those valuable articles of commerce are, if not incalculable, certainly unknown to the English public. cotton alone the value of the exports from India into England rose from £9,344,000 in 1861 to £34,409,000 in 1863. India might be made to defray all the expenses of the Home Government in raw cotton alone.

A writer, H., in the Times of yesterday argues that the interest payable on the India National Debt should, if possible, be paid in India instead of in England. This is at present impossible, as Europeans in India want their money in England; and as natives of India still entertain a profound distrust of the financial policy of the British Government. Out of 62,608 proprietors of Indian Railway Stock and Debentures guaranteed by the Government only 390 are natives living in India. Of Indian Railway Stock only about one-sixtieth (1-60) is held in India.

An able writer in the Times Money Market article of the 9th inst. appears to have been deceived by the cry that the assistance which Government is now tardily giving to the export trade by advancing money on the security of the hypo-thecation of export goods has a prejudicial effect on the exchanges. On the contrary, the encouragment of the export trade is the only way of saving the finances, and of enabling the officers of Government and other Europeans to remit money home without the necessity of paying fabulous sums to the speculators.

What hope can we have of the good government of India when some of her administrators, who are most trusted, publicly declare that nothing ought to be done; that the art of doing nothing ought to be cultivated. A very talented and distinguished member of Parliament, well acquainted with India, is reported to have lately said:—

The disposition of the Government of India seems to be to adept a waiting policy, and there are not sufficient data to enable any one to pronounce with confidence that this course is wrong. "When in doubt what to do, try how it will answer to do nothing" is a maxim of much value.—See Record on the 11th September.

Is there no successor to Dickens who can hold up to ridicule the art of how not to do it? Barnacles may exist without much danger in the English administration, but they will cause utter ruin to India. My countrymen do not appear to nnderstand how like to a volcano India is. We ought to be prepared for war night and day, and we ought to have statesmen as our chiefs who possess our confidence. It is a bad sign when a newspaper like the Madras Mail writes:—

The Marquis of Salisbury must be going out of his mind. His determination to make Europeans subordinate to natives is a forcing of water up hill that cannot possibly succeed.

It is a bad sign when her Majesty's Viceroy publicly chides the highest Court of Justice on a question on which he is as ignorant as the youngest magistrate in India:—

Chief Justice.—I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And, in the administration of his law,
While I was busy for the Commonwealth,
Your Highness pleased to forget my place,
The majesty and power of law and justice,
The image of the King whom I presented,
And struck me in my very seat of judgment.

King Henry the Fourth.

-Your obedient servant, September 26. Т.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

The Englishman remarks that in adopting the laissez faire policy with reference to the fall in silver, advocated by the Economist, the Secretary of State seems to ignore the fact that, though, as far as trade is concerned, matters will no doubt, as that journal argues, adjust themselves in the course of time, there is no prospect whatever of their adjusting themselves as far as the revenues of this country are concerned. No doubt, in the long run, it matters but little to trade what the value of silver may be, though the rapid fluctuations of value which we are now witnessing threaten to disorganise it. But, seeing that a great part of its land revenue is fixed in silver, it is a matter of most serious importance to the Government of India to guard itself against the consequences of a permanent fall in the value of that metal. Not only must the immediate consequence of such a fall be financial embarrassment of the most harassing and demoralising character, but, unless the Government is prepared to abolish the Permanent Settlement, the only device by which it can surmount the mischief, when once it has been allowed to become an accomplished fact, will be the transfer to the shoulders of the general public of the burden which ought to be borne, and which hitherto had been borne, by the landholders. The price of the laissez faire policy is, in short, either bankruptcy, or gross injustice. Already the rest of India is crying out with reason against the iniquity of a settlement which relieves the Bengal landlord of a large part of his fair share of the public burden at the expense of his fellows. What will the rest of India say when they find that the effect of the fall in silver has been to relieve the Bengal landlord of a yet further portion of that burden to their disadvantage?

LEAF DISEASE IN COFFEE.

The Madras Athenæum understands that this mysterious disease of the coffee tree, which has for the last three years caused so much anxiety, has already made its appearance in several places in the Wynaad, and thinks the time has arrived for Government to take more prominent measures for its eradication than merely submitting the diseased leaves to the microscope. Coffee is to Southern India and to Ceylon what opium is to Bengal, perhaps of more importance, for the former has a wide world consumption, and whilst it exists will always be in demand, whilst the latter is only consumed by one people, who are rapidly extending its cultivation themselves, and therefore after a time will cease to patronise Bengal. All diseases, whether of human, animal, or vegetable construction, require attentive examination and careful watching before treatment, therefore it was judicious to have done as the Government has in providing for the investigation of the complaint. But this investigation has lasted three years and nothing has come of it, proving that it has been altogether useless, and that some other means should be proposed for its eradication. When a disease attacked the vine in France the Government of that country, well knowing the importance of the subject to the people and to the revenue, not only set all the Government savants at work but offered a reward of £20,000 to any one who could discover an antidote, and little Portugal in the same way offered £5,000 for the same purpose and with the best of results, for the disease has nearly been stamped out in both countries. Now as our authorities on this subject are at fault we conceive that the Madras Government, in conjunction with Ceylon, are in duty bound to offer a handsome reward (such a reward as would make it worth a man's while to locate himself in the coffee districts for seasons if it becomes necessary, to master the subject), open for competition to the whole world, to any one who could discover both a preventative and cure, and for the simplest and least expensive mode of application; should this be done we can assure every person visiting the coffee districts of the unbounded hospitality, assistance and encouragement of the gentleman interested in coffee; and if he chooses to go to work without a reward from Government, and should he be fortunate enough to discover a radical cure, he may make a rapid fortune by the sale of where coffee grows. Up to the present time planters differ as to the injury done to the trees, but all agree that the quality of the fruit has deteriorated, and in too many cases the quantity also. The situation is very critical. But if we have every confidence in the dominable energy of the planters which has worked the coffee districts to its present magnificent proportions, yet it is the duty of a good Government to exercise a parental care over such interests as would appear imperatively to require it.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

The Pioneer holds that the magnificent Sikh regiments, the various corps of 'plucky little Goorkhas, and the splendid irregular cavalry, will always have an attraction for young fellows, to whom the idea of the humdrum monotony of military life, as typified by an ordinary life, as typified by an nary Madras or Bombay regiment, is eminently distasteful. It is entirely from the point of view of a subaltern who is hesitating whether or not he shall enter the Staff Corps that we have given what appear to him the chances of advancement he will have, if he has to stick to regimental duty. And there is much reason in the objection he advances. He sees, by looking over the "Army List," that in nearly every corps the appointments of adjutant and quarter-master are filled up, and he knows that the present incumbents will hold those appointments until they are majors. This does not encourage him. He also observes that he will have to wait until he becomes a lieutenant-colonel before he gets a wing, and the chances are that if he has no interest, and cannot hope to get into civil employment, he thinks he had better remain where he is; and if he is popular in his regiment, his decision will be heartily endorsed by his comrades, whose views of the Staff Corps are generally expressed in language more forcible than elegant. Thus we think it is clear that the armies of Madras and Bombay can get no subalterns, because in the present stagnation of promotion caused by the numbers of field officers there are to provide for they do not see their way to anything worth having, and also because the appointments of adjutant and quarter-master are practically closed to them. As regards the field officers in those armies, it becomes a question, which we merely glance at en passant now, whether Government would not gain considerably by an extension of the present retirement scheme to others besides substantive lieutenant-colonels who have done twenty-eight years' service. If it were thrown open to all officers over twentyfive years' service, or even a year or two less, and if it were distinctly stated that this arrangement would only remain in force for two years, we are much mistaken if large numbers of field officers would not avail themselves of it, and the army be appreciably lightened of its burden. In this way Government would be saved the expense of off-reckonings to a number of officers who will in the ordinary course of things vegetate on their comforable allowthe ordinary course or things vegetate on their comforable anowances until they become entitled to these off-reckonings; and Government would also save the payment of £100 a year—Lord Clive's Fund—to the widows of officers who would under the present state of things hang on till the completion of their thirty-eight years' service. In this way captains would command wings, and subalterns would flock to the Staff Corps. We do not suppose the authorities are aware that the feet of the communications are aware that the feet of the communications. wings, and subatterns would nock to the Stan Corps. We do not suppose the authorities are aware that the fact of the commutation scheme being prolonged indefinitely from year to year keeps many officers from taking advantage of it. Very many supernumerary regimental colonels—the very class it is most desirable to get rid of—hold on from year to year, wellfortable in the assurance that there is no hurry about it, and that if they keep their health, they will wait for the off-reckonings, but if not, why there is always the commutation scheme to fall back upon. We have shown that in the Madras army many regiments have three colonels in them, that is, two full colonels and one lieutenant-colonel, and not a single subaltern. Comment on this appears almost superfluous: yet it represents a state of affairs not without gravity, and it remains for those in authority to consider whether a scheme somewhat in accordance with that we have merely adumbrated here would not be really economical in the end, by showing subalterns in British corps that the Indian Army offers a career, and whether it would not induce them to come forward in sufficient numbers to officer the native regiments.

STATION TALK.

SRINAGAR, Aug. 26.—On the western shores of the Dul Lake is a large village called Hazratbul, where there is a sacred mosque, in which, in a small bottle with a gold stopper, is preserved a reputed hair of the beard of Mohammed. It is thus securely guarded in a bottle to prevent its disappearing, for it did disappear once, to the no small trouble and consternation of the followers of the Prophet. This relic gives rise to some half dozen festivals yearly, when 'tt is exhibited to an admiring and adoring multitude, who crowd on land and water to get a glimpse of the sacred remnant. When the excitement is at its highest, a collection is made, and good large sums are realised. One of these festivals, the principal one, has just been concluded, and the moollahs are said to be pleased with the pecuniary results of the exhibition. Was there ever more credulous foolery than this? And yet, must it be confessed, there are some people professing a more exalted faith, doing things scarcely less absurd, and for the same reason they pay. What a number of absurdities would disappear from the world but for the reason that they pay. It is refreshing to turn from this gross superstition to the Medical Mission Hospital, not very far from the scene of this Mussulman  $m\hat{e}la$ , and see what has been going on there of late. Up to date, Mr. Wade tells us, he has received 15,000 visits this season, and has entered the names of 2,700 separate patients in the register. These sick people have not only come from the Valley of Kashmir Proper, but amongst them have been Punjabis, Ladakhis, Pathans, Dogras, Dards, and even Goorkhas. One of the first things to be done with these natives, especially with the Mussulmans, is to get them to give up their charms. These are sold to them by the priests, and in time of pestilence the native Government does not hesitute to make capital by by the sale of these spells, which usually consist of the name of God, or Mohammed, or verses of the Koran written on a piece of paper and sewn into a piece of red cloth. They are worn on the arm, or on the dress, but the patients, if they have any open sore, are in the habit of tying the charm round the limb or body, where-ever the sore may be, and thus prevent its healing, so that to get rid of these amulets is not only to get rid of so much misdirected faith, but one great obstruction to the cure of the disease. Mr. Wade has got a large collection of these charms, so many evangelicomedical trophies. Before the patients are seen medically, a portion of Scripture is read and explained to them, and they listen with marked attention. I have before observed how very successful has been the medical work of this mission, and if persevered with there can be no doubt the evangelical work will, in the end, be equally successful. To judge by the collection for the medical mission, made among the visitors here lately, it would appear that those who have had the opportunity of seeing and judging for themselves are alive to the great utility of these undertakings, but I fear their vast importance to such people as the Kashmiris is not generally understood. I shall return to this subject again. The Yarkund Envoy is here enjoying rest after his long journey. He is occupying the Dilawar Khan Bagh, not the healthiest locality in Srinagar. He is a tall, stout, heavy, but intelligent-looking Asiatic, and at dinner uses his knife and fork like a good Christian—I mean Mussulman. He paid an official visit to the Political Officer here on the 15th, which was returned by Major Henderson the following day. He was entertained in the Shalimar Garden on the 19th, when many of the English visitors were present; he gave a return entertainment yesterday in the Nasim Bagh, the garden of breezes. It has not yet transpired when he will take his departure for Simla. He has been slightly indisposed since he arrived at Srinagar, and his leader, Captain Molloy, has also been ailing.

Simla, Aug. 27.—The fate of Simla in the future is naturally discussed a good deal here, and few of the old habitués can tolerate the idea of being driven out. Six or seven Viceroys have put up with the place, and why cannot Lord Lytton in his turn be content? people ask. Ill health! How could any place be healthy if it is crowded like Simla and not allowed to spend sixpence on sanitation? There is the Secretary of State's sanction for the necessary outlay. There would be no more complaints of unhealthiness if the place were once properly drained and supplied with clean water. For ten years or more people were kept in a perpetual ferment of uncertainty as to whether they were going to be left here or not. Then at last it seemed as if a decision really had been reached. The fixt was practically uttered, and people bought their houses, made their little improvements, and looked forward to peace. Now, everything is restored to the condition of sixes and sevens. Ranikhet! What is the use of talking about a place that does not exist? It would take twenty years to build a station at Ranikhet big enough for the Government, and think of the expense! Besides, Ranikhet is badly off for water. All Viceroys begin with a craze about Ranikhet, but the whole subject was exhausted by Lord Mayo. There are the reports for reference—tons of reports. Colonel Colley! Now, is it reasonable to suppose that any one man, and a stranger to the country, too, can go for a flying visit to Ranikhet, and find out anything new about the place? Crowded up at Government House? Of course, they are crowded there; who ever said Peterhoff was fit to be a Government House? But there's the Observatory Hill; it belongs to Government already; why not level the top right off, and build a proper Government House? The clerks to be considered! and build a proper Government House? The clerks to be considered! Every body knows that, but what is easier than to build for the clerks away towards Boileau Gunge, right out of the way of the bazaar? The only difficulty is that Government will not make up its mind. Besides, the clerks have been quite well this season, thank you. They are not complaining, though they really have something to complain of, while this uncertainty continues, and no proper accommodation is provided for them, and the bazaar no proper accommodation is provided for them, and the bazaar is allowed to go on getting worse and worse every year. Of course, everybody must submit if the Viceroy really can't live here, but why not give the place a fair trial? There's Windsor Castle; it's beyond the beyonds, at the back of nowhere, but that would not matter to the Viceroy; he hasn't got to go to anybody, everybody's got to go to him. Like him to try Windsor Castle? I'd rather be kicked, but I'd rather he'd try Windsor Castle than Ranikhet. I have roughly endeavoured to sum up current talk on the subject, and there is no doubt that any removal current talk on the subject, and there is no doubt that any removal from Simla would be a very troublesome undertaking. It would take so long a time to prepare any other plan, moreover, that the Viceroy, whoever he might be, who decreed the move, would certainly not be the Vicercy to witness it. No doubt in the back-ground, whatever may be said about the difficulty of a move to any place in these hills, there remains Ootacamund. But while the absolute merits of Ootacamund are beyond contention there is But while a very strong feeling among men experienced in Indian administration that the Government could not go there. The south of Indian goverus itself; the north is the region that claims the vigilance and the presence of Government. I do not entirely follow the argument; India is governed by boxes, and it is not because the Viceroy is at Simla, that he knows any more than he could learn in Madras of Kheyls and Afridis, and the news of the Cabul frontier. But, on the other hand every day's extra dak between the summer quarters of the Supreme Government and the great centres of the local Government in the north of India is an evil. I am not prepared to say whether, looking to the future improvement of the railway system, the objections now urged against the Neilgherries are insuperable, but at present the course of post between Ootacamund and Lahor is not encouraging for friends of the scheme which would send the Viceroy there. Meanwhile the prolongation of the present unsettled state of things is very hard upon everybody who, without being in any way able to control the settlement, must, nevertheless, regulate their future lives accordingly. And whether this place is kept up as a seat of Government or abandoned, surely it ought to be put in proper order? Government or no Government, it will always be popular in the season, and even if the Government might not intend to stop and profit by improvements, these ought, none the less, to be carried out. For the Government is clearly responsible for the present disgraceful sanitary state of Simla.

Naini Tal, Aug. 29.—I think you may accept it as pretty certain that Sir John will not return to the North-West. Rumour points to the post now held by Sir William Muir as the sphere in which Sir John will work when he returns to this country. What a change from restoring architectural remains to repairing the finances of India, and restoring the reputation of the rupee. Apropos of finance it seems a little funny considering that India is supposed to be almost bankrupt to read that there is to be a grand Durbar at Delhi. Surely, fifteen or twenty thousand troops cannot be moved into Delhi for nothing, and it strikes one that the money that will be spent on this costly pageant might be more advantageously utilised than in giving éclot to the proclamation of a title which is looked upon with disfavour by a large section of her Majesty's subjects, and which has subjected the nation to no little ridicule abroad. After all, what's in a name?—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellancous.

A EUROPEAN BURGLAR.—The name of the European taken in the act of committing a burglary at Dera is Henry Seale. The latest report is that he died on the 27th August from the blow on the head given him by the constable who captured him.

SAIVID YAKUB KHAN.—The Kashgar Envoy was entertained at dinner in the Nishat Garden, at Srinugar, by Major Henderson, the Political Officer on duty in Kashmir. He is expected to reach Lahor on the 7th October, en route to Simla, and accompanied by Captain Molloy.

SCARCITY IN BIKANIR.—A letter from Bikanir, says the Rajputana News, announces that the people are quitting the place and surrounding villages by hundreds, all flocking in the direction of Jeypore and Ajmere. Famine is said to be inevitable, and such a one that has hitherto been unexperienced.

SIMLA ITEMS.—All reports in circulation as to the successors of the present Lieutenant-Governors of the Panjab and Bengal are incorrect. No arrangements concerning them have as yet been made by the Viceroy. The question of the summer residence of Government is still unsettled. All the Government offices will, however, certainly come here next year.—Englishman Correspondent.

CIVIL ENGINEERS' GRIEVANCES.—We have reason to think that the wrongs of the civil engineers in India, which have been fully ventilated in the Pioneer during the last few months, have attracted attention in the proper quarter, and are likely soon to be redressed. We believe also the mode of redress contemplated will probably harmonise in the main with the recommendations recently put forward in our leading columns.—Pioneer.

THE VACANT SEE.—The nomination of a successor to the late Dr. Milman is, we hear from home, likely to be delayed until the question of creating bishops for Burmah and Lahor has been absolutely settled. But that these appointments will ere long become facts, there is now little room to question. Aided by the societies connected in one way or another with Church extension, the fund is flourishing, and what is equally to the point, their several delegates have been coaxed into tolerable harmony upon the vexed questions of status and emolument.—Pioneer.

News from Swat.—The news from Swat, received by Indian Public Opinion, says that "the Akhund's eldest son, who is a refugee in Kashgar, has made a demand on his father for a subsidy of four lakhs of rupees, and has threatened a hostile advance on Swat, with the help of the Chief of Kashgar, in the event of refusal, and also that he would be driven by desperation to assassinate the Akhund, who was much affected on reading the letter, and retired to a Hujra, requesting his most trusty disciples and personal followers to keep a strict watch over his personal safety, and to let no strangers, or armed men, approach him."

FATAL ACCIDENT TO AN OFFICER.—We understand that Mr. Barter, of her Majesty's 73rd Regiment, whose melancholy death we recorded on Monday last, went out bear shooting, unaccompanied by any European. He was brought into Sabathu dead, with a bullet through his head. The coolies who brought him in stated he had tripped and shot himself as he fell; but from the direction of the bullet it is surmised that the man who carried his second gun behind him accidentally discharged it. It is said that this man had not appeared at Sabathu when the news was sent to Simla.—

Pioneer, Sept. 13.

PENNY-WISDOM.—The Blue-book of the Army Medical Department, containing the annual statistics of the health of the army, is no longer to be distributed to the officers of the Army Medical Department. A single copy is to be forwarded to each garrison hospital as a record, and there preserved. The price of the book is about two shillings; and by this economical measure the army estimates will be reduced by some fifty or sixty pounds annually. This fifty pounds will about pay for two rounds of ammunition and two projectiles for the new Woolwich infants, but in the meantime the medical officers of the army lose their copies of the periodical in which topics of purely military surgery, medicine, or hygiene are discussed.—Pioneer.

Mr. Winter's Case.—We think the Englishman has been somewhat misled in Mr. Winter's case. The truth we believe to be that Sir Richard Temple got frightened at what he had done; for we understand that it was only on Saturday last that the order concerning Mr. Winter's suspension was cancelled by him. He had seen the comments of the public papers upon the Playfair case, and foresaw a storm when the public heard of Mr. Winter's suspension. We must refuse, therefore, to accept the Englishman's amended version of the case; for our contemporary opens his columns far too readily to contributors, to be quite trusted. The fact is patent that Sir Richard Temple knew that his punishment of Mr. Winter was likely to create a scandal, and so he cancelled the order. Does any one really believe that it was consideration for Mr. Winter that made him do so? We do not. We believe that seeing the indignation of the public in the Playfair case, he was afraid to let the resolution in the Winter case stand; and so withdrew it.—

Indian Surveys.— The ultimate extinction of the Trigonometrical branch of the Survey Department, in India will ensue on the completion of its specific task. The work of the other branches expands as time goes on. For the purposes of revenue administration, more and more complete maps of districts are constantly required. Even in England, the Ordnance surveys are continually being worked out to larger and larger scales, and a fortiori the progressive requirements of the Government of India may be relied on to keep the Survey department employed. But the duty of the Trigonometrical branch is to fix the exact position of certain points once for all. The care with which this work is performed can hardly be realised by anyone unfamiliar with the use of theodolites. In measuring triangles with sides of seventy or eighty miles, inaccuracies of inches are treated as serious, and it will readily be understood that work done with that degree of elaboration is not intended to be done over again. When the precise position on the map of a sufficient number of points, within which the minor triangles of the revenue and topographical surveys can be grouped, has been determined, the Trigonometral branch may shut up its When that time comes, however, the distinction between the various branches will have been a good deal obliterated.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY.—The Rev. J. B. Morewood, whose untimely death is announced by the Chaplain of Dharmsala, was well known to many residents in this station. His history was singular. Early in life he came under the influence of some zealous Roman Catholics and was induced to enter the Roman communion. He devoted his whole fortune (a not inconsiderable sum) to the erection of a church and clergy house in Gloucestershire, and after some years' study received orders in the Roman Church. Maturer years led him to doubt the wisdom of the change. He was sent as a missionary to China, where his doubts being confirmed, he returned to the English Church. Being absolutely without funds, he accepted, through the kind offices of a China merchant, a clerkship in a factory in Bengal. While so employed, he established and taught in a school. Bishop Cotton's attention was attracted to him, and in a school. Bishop Cotton's attention was attracted to him, and the bishop obtained for him an appointment in the Punjab, whence, as one of the clergy supported by the U.C.S., he went to Burmah, and for many years ministered at Moulmein. Afterwards he was appointed to the Railway Chaplaincy in Allahabad. Here, during the absence of the Military Chaplain, he was required to attend the hospitals of the 19th Regiment during a severe outbreak of cholera. His devotion to the sick induced the worthy daughter of one of India's noblest soldiers to procure for him the nomination to a chap-laincy. He was appointed to Gwalior, and having suffered from sunstroke, had visited Dharmsala to re-establish his health. Unworldly even to a fault, he was entirely devoted to his sacred calling. The geniality of his disposition inculcated the useful lesson that religion may be sincere and vital, yet not gloomy. In all classes of society he was respected as a pastor, and beloved as a friend, and on the lives of some his influence has not been transient.

THE KOHAT AFRIDIS .-- The latest news with regard to the Afridis in the Kohat pass, given by the Peshawar correspondent of the Pioneer, is as follows:—"I may tell you that, at the commencement of the blockade, some two hundred of the men in the pass left it, and sought refuge with the Deputy Commissioner at Kohat. These men a short time ago offered to enter the pass, and give their brethren a licking; and accordingly they went. It so happened that, owing to a dispute in the village of Khundoor, in the Hussun Kheyl territory, the men from the pass had been called there to arbitrate on the matter, and our two hundred were able to enter the pass, and to occupy, unresisted, the Kotla, and several small forts. The news was quickly carried to those engaged in arbitration at Khundoor, upon which they, and many of the Hussun Kheyl, immediately set out to retake the strongholds thus seized in their absence. On their approach those of the brave two hundred who had not occupied the forts thought better of their intentions, and bolted. But those in the forts were quickly surrounded, and despoiled of their arms. This seems to be the real version of the story that was lately reported that the Afridis had attacked a party of our own men, and rified them of their arms. Only a few days ago, three grass-cutters were carried off from Fort Mackeson, from which it seems that, far from giving in, the Afridis are more intent than ever on giving us every provocation in their power, and are more and more bent upon open defiance. The case every day becomes one of greater difficulty. As to punishing this wretched lot of lawless freebooters, it would cause us to run the risk of losing many valuable lives, with no real good to be gained by it; and to take the country from them would necessitate the holding of a miserable line of road at the greatest inconvenience to us. Such acts of open defiance as the boning of grass-cutters, or any subjects of the State, from such a fort as Mackeson will necessarily have to be put a stop to. But if, after a blockade of several months, the Afridis still indulge in such little larks it becomes which the terms of the state o larks, it becomes plain that some stronger measures must be resorted to. The coming visit of the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief will possibly bring things to a climax, and if active measures are to be taken, it is to be hoped that the regiments under orders to leave Peshawar, in course of relief will be allowed to take a part in them."

STATION TALK.

NAGERCOIL, Aug. 29.—There is very little news stirring in this direction. Among the natives there has been a little excitement caused by the much-dreaded "Surrukku Mari," which has paid us a visit. It is astonishing what an unreasoning being the average native is in a matter of this kind. No story is too incredible for him to believe, no nostrum is too disgusting for him to accept. All kinds of reports were spread with alarming rapidity about the amazing fatality of this disease, and everybody believed them as a matter of course, though not a single person could vouch for anything on his own knowledge. I was told, with an amplitude of detail and circumstantiality that seemed to defy the stoutest scepticism, of the death of one of the Medical Mission dressers at Nagoor by this disease. The description of the whole affair was most vivid. The young man (name, parentage, and all detailed) was most vivid. The young man (name, parentage, and all detailed) was sitting with the other dressers as they all laughed and made merry over the "Surrukku Mari," and the goat's-dung remedy, when he was seized by the pitiless goddess herself, in the big toe. But the more he cried out with pain the more they laughed at the joke, and declared that he was acting his part very well. He entreated them to give him medicine, but they laughed the more at his request, and expressed their determination to watch the case to the very end expressed their determination to watch the case to the very end, and see if it were really a fatal disease. And, awful to relate, my informant went on to say the young man died in their presence, and in the midst of all the "Europe" medicine of the hospital. By what more powerful lesson could the goddess teach us to trust implicitly in the goat's dung than by such a case as that? The best of the story is, that the young man is at this moment alive and well, and has never had "Surrukku Mari" either in his big toe or anywhere else; yet some of higher rank than natives thought the story must have some foundation, and that it would be a good thing to set the minds of their dependents at ease by purchasing an orthodox black she-goat, and letting it be known in the neighbourhood that the all-powerful specific for the new plague might be had at their bungalows. I have made many inquiries about those who are reported to have suffered and died of this disease. I find undoubted traces of the spread of the "Surrukku Mari" among the people, and can put my finger on some who have really been attacked by it; but, in spite of all the positive and alarming reports of its fatal character, I have quite failed to obtain the name and address of any person who has died of it, nor can I find any one who has himself seen a person who could personally testify to such a case. On all sides I hear of cases which some one has heard from some one else, who, in his turn, received the news from another person, and so on. I have come to the conclusion that there is no fatal issue to the disease at all.—Madras Times Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE PIER FOUNDATIONS.—Mr. Allen, the harbour diver, was this morning engaged in ascertaining the nature of the bottom in and about the vicinity of the pier, and, after remaining under water for about an hour and a half, he reported that the sea had receded very considerably. It is thought, therefore, that the pier will have to be extended, as the lower portion of the piles are denuded of the ground in which they were embedded.—Madras Mail. Sept. 9.

considerably. It is thought, therefore, that the pier will have to be extended, as the lower portion of the piles are denuded of the ground in which they were embedded.—Madras Mail, Sept. 9.

SIR SALAR JUNG.—The Times of India says that "Sir Salar Jung intends to make preparations for taking part in the forthcoming grand Darbar of Delhi in January next, at which his Highness the Nizam will, probably, put in an appearance, if his health permits, and thus fulfil the promise made when he was obliged from ill-health to forego the pleasure of meeting his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Bombay. If his Highness does attend, the display, as befits so exalted a personage, will, no doubt, be grand and costly."

The Late Captain Castor.—We regret to learn of the death, on Monday morning last, from heart disease, of Captain John Castor, late Master Attendant of the port of Coconada. Captain Castor was formerly connected with the merchant service, and commanded several vessels in the coasting trade. The last ship he commanded was the Teazer, of which he was part owner. His first appointment was Master Attendant of Cochin, a post he held many years, from whence he was transferred to Coconada on the death of Captain Thompson, the Master Attendant of that port, in 1870. Captain Castor always evinced great interest in public affairs, and was a Municipal Commissioner, both in Cochin and Coconada, at which latter place he was only recently appointed by Government as Emigration Agent under the Burmah Labour Law. Captain Castor has been a Master Attendant, or, as the post was at one time called, a "Port Captain," for the space of nearly thirty-five years, during which period he has done good service.—Madras Mail, Sept. 6.

Another Effect of the Fuller Case.—A letter from Bangalor to the Madras Athenœum says:—I wouldn't like to be certain whether the famous minute of Lord Lytton on the Fuller case, which I see has commanded the unqualified approval of the cockney press of England's metropolis, has been read, marked, learned, and digested by the ghoraculla of the period, but what happened on Sunday in the compound of a certain gallant officer of the 45th looks very much like it. Captain Baynes, on the afternoon of that particular day, was impudently accosted by his horse-keeper, who asked for his pay. From what I can make out, the Captain liking neither the manner nor the matter of the query, Sunday at the best being a very odd day whereon to demand one's wages, got angry, when the horse-keeper turned to and gave his master a thundering thrashing. Captain Baynes is a slight, delicate man, and we shall, of course, hear more of the case in a Court of Justice. But, then, what is the world coming to, when servants, instead of submitting to be quietly thrashed by their British masters, apply the argumentum baculinum in their own persons on those of the ruling race? I am informed that Captain Baynes was very roughly treated, and in a large military station like this, crowded as it is with troops, I quite expect to hear that a very unpleasant feeling has been engendered. Captain Baynes, I be lieve, lives in the Infantry lines.

POSTAL IRREGULARITIES.—In an article on the loss of Indian letters in their transit through the Post-office, the Madras Athensum copies some ludicrous addresses from natives to Europeans. Prodigal of high-flown titles as natives are to each other and to Englishmen, it is somewhat startling to find a suppliant directing a petition to "Miss Victoria, H.R.H. the Queen of England in London, via Brindisi, through Italy, Baring;" and a host of others writing to the Prince of Wales, when he was here, as "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Esq., C.S." The misposting of letters in India is very common. When receptacles for street sweepings, something in the shape of pillar-boxes, were first established along the main London thoroughfares, the contractors were compelled to have the contents searched nightly for the letters that at first came thickly; and the present writer remembers seeing half-a-dozen letters taken from the alms box at the gate of one of the great London hospitals. Among the unsophisticated and careless coolies of India mistakes of this nature are much more common, and we are told that letters "have been found in the cistern of first-class carriages on the G.I.P. Railway, in the venetians of a dog-box attached to a brake-van; and on one occasion an intelligent ryot was discovered diligently tapping and examining every telegraph post he came near to find the slit in which to post his letter." After all, grumblers have not much reason in their attacks upon the Post-office authorities. We are well served, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the delay or the loss is caused by the carelessness of the public itself.

Mr. Nugent.—Mr. Nugent, Under-Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, is, it is said, to be appointed collector and magistrate at Belgaum, and Mr. Lee-Warner, who acted for Mr. Nugent some time since, is to come back to the Secretariat.

MILITARY.—We (Times of India) hear that the 108th Regiment at Mhow will be relieved in November by the 2nd Battalion 17th Regiment from England. The 4th Battalion 60th Rifles on arrival from England will proceed to Poona.

MEDICAL.—Surgeon Major Manifold arrived at Mhow on the 6th September from Rangoon, and took charge of the office of Deputy Surgeon General, B. M. T., from Dr. Thomson, 3rd Hussars, who has been officiating since Dr. Gallway's departure to England.

EUROPEAN GENERAL HOSPITAL.—The Bombay Government still refuse to provide a proper building for a European General Hospital, and strive to make the committee of the Sailors' Home giue up their new building for the purpose. The committee have lately been registered as the Sailors' Home Society, under the Societies' and Companies' Act, and they can now protest in the High Court against the proceedings of the Government.

BOMBAY CHAPLAINS.—One-fourth of the Bombay chaplains are in Europe. The visiting chaplain of Neemuch suggested to the worthy people there the desirability of subscribing towards the endowment fund of the proposed Bishopric of Lahor. After he left they talked the matter over and agreed they might as well try to endow a new Brigadier-General. However, about fifty rupees were given.—Indian Church Gazette, Sept. 2.

COLONEL CHAPMAN.—Mentioning the 25th N.L.I. reminds me of a little story I have heard from Mhow, where that regiment now is. Lieut. Colonel Chapman, wing officer of the 25th, was transferred as acting second-in-command to the 10th at Mehidpore. Being very popular in his regiment, and throughout the army, I may be allowed to add, a farewell dinner was given him. Just as everyone was about to sit down to dinner, a telegram was put into Colonel Chapman's hand, telling him he was to remain in the 25th as acting second, vice Colonel Fairbrother, appointed acting commandant of the 22nd at Baroda. However, there the dinner was, and it had to be eaten; so as it could not be one of farewell, it was turned into one of congratulation. Everyone was better pleased that it should be so.—Times of India Correspondent.

The Legislative Council.—At the meeting of the Legislative Council at Puna on September 5 all the members were present. Colonel Anderson was appointed an additional member of the Council, and was also present. The reports of Select Committees on the Revenue Code Bill, chapters 1 to 5, and on the Ferries Bill, as well as letters of the Government of India vetoing the Bombay City Land Revenue Bill and Mamlutdars Courts Bill were presented to the Council. The Bombay City Land Revenue Bill was read a first, second, and third time and passed. The Mamlutdars Courts Bill was read a first time and referred to a select committee. The Ferries Bill was withdrawn on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Gibbs. Messrs. Anderson, Mandlik, and Rogay were reappointed to the select committee on the Revenue Code Bill. The Council then adjourned to September 20.

DEATH OF Mr. ALEX. THOMSON.—The grave has just closed over one who has been familiar to most of us in Bombay for many years past. In the loss of Mr. Alexander Thomson his friends now miss one whose genial nature endeared him to them, and one whose acquaintance was always appreciated. Like so many of his countrymen, he began life in one of the Scotch banks in his native country (Kincardine), and there can be little doubt that the rudiments them acquired proved of the greatest use to him in after life. In time he found his way to London, and after passing a number of years in two of the Joint-Stock Banks there he commenced his career in the East as Manager of the Bank of Hindustan in Bombay. The changes which occurred about 1865-66 led him, like a number of others, to become an exchange broker. His success while in this city has been entirely owing to the combination of peculiar business abilities with an affability which made him the friend of all with whom he came in contact.—Times of India, Sept. 15.

MOHAMMEDAN FEELING AT MECCA.—If the Mohammedans of India em to regard the Servian war and the present precarious condition of the Turkish Empire with considerable indifference the same charge cannot be brought against their brethren of Arabia. We recently published a few items of news received by a late mail from Jeddah, and among them an account of a meeting held by the metowafs (or pilgrim guides) at Mecca, at which an important step was taken with the avowed intention of marking the displeasure which the community felt at certain acts done by the English Consul at Jeddah. Now we hear that the magnates of Mecca have again met together, but this time with a view to consider the present position of the war in Turkey, and the result, as in the former case, has been of an eminently practical nature. It was decided unanimously that in the existing state of affairs the whole of the Mohammedan world was bound to come forward and assist, either in purse or person, the streggling empire. Already the people of Mecca and Jeddah have responded to the call made on them, and at the time of the departure of the last mail a sum of 25,000 dollars had made its way into the hands of the treasurers at Mecca for remittance to Constantinople. The formal declaration thus made and acknowledged in Mecca, calling on Moham-medans throughout the world to contribute to the support of the Turkish Empire as a religious duty, is an event of no slight importance. Had the appeal issued from the Sultan it might have carried even more weight with it, but issuing as it does from Mecca, it goes abroad with the sanction and approbation of all the recognised heads of the orthodox sects.—Bombay Gazette.

THE RECENT FLOODS.—On the 4th September a very high flood occurred in the Kanhan river, which flows past the Kamptee cantonment on its north-east side. No such flood has occurred for the past forty-five years, and the authorities, having no knowledge or record of extraordinary floods in the Kanhan river, were quite unprepared. Not a boat was to be had, not even a cance, to send food to the European guards cut off and isolated by the flood during Monday, the 4th inst., from the barracks, &c. The natives for some years past have been allowed to build houses at the Gorah and Sudder bazaars on ground much below high flood level, and as a result these bazaars have suffered considerably. The Gorah bazaar, of eight hundred houses or more, is in ruins. No European lives were lost, and only six natives are reported as missing, but they are not known to be drowned. The damage to the military buildings is small, and to roads and bridges comparatively trifling. No bridges or culverts have been destroyed. One bridge on the Nagpore road near the cemetery has had the wing walls injured, but the arch remains. The earth bank which forms the road was breached for a short length, and this breach made the road impassable for two days.—Broach, Sept. 6.—I happened to be standing on the north side of the Nerbudda river when the end part on the south side fell with a mighty splash—I think four or five spans went all at once. When I got up this morning I saw a very wide gap, about six more spans must have gone, and four others are in a critical condition. I have always held the opinion that this bridge was unsafe; and I have never yet met an engineer who knew anything of bridges, and what such a bridge ought to be, who could speak in its favour. I stood on the river bank yesterday, and as I saw the huge trunks of trees floating down, I thought they looked formidable masses to strike against the thin piles of the bridge; but I believe the catastrophe has been occasioned largely by the underscour, which must have been tremendous. The water heaps itself up against the upper side of the piles, and then rushes through with the force of a cataract; and, as the spring tides are on, with a twelve feet rise, you may imagine what the scour must be when the tide turns. It is to be hoped this last lesson will teach the authorities of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central reson will teach the authorhies of the Boinbay, Baroda, and Central India Railway that these slender bridges are not adapted for such rivers as the Nerbudda. There could be no difficulty in bridging such a river with suitable piers. The floating pier which used to be secured every rainy season has this year floated away down to the sea. This is a serious loss to the pattimars which trade here, and some one is to blame.—Times of India Correspondent.

Export of Bullion.—The following were the exports of specie to the East by the steamers of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company notified in De Quetteville's Indian Circular for September 28th:—From Southampton, per Poonak, Sept. 21—Gold, to Alexandria, £82,000; Silver, to Bombay, £150,000; Gold, to Ceylon, £1,125; Silver, to Calcutta, £453,300; Silver, to Penang. £44,100; Silver, to Hong Kong, £46,950; Silver, to Shanghai, £58,960. Per Pekin, Sept. 28—Gold, to Alexandria, £72,400; Silver, to Bombay. £132,000. bay, £132,000.

BILLS ON INDIA.—As was anticipated, the weekly allotment of the India Council drafts by the Bank of England on Wednesday shows some falling off in the demand for these means of remittance to the East, after the rapid advance of the preceding weeks. The amount of bills and telegraphic transfers allotted was 35,00,000 rupees (say The amount £350,000), of which £143,800 was taken for Calcutta, £56,200 for Madras, and £150,000 for Bombay. Tenders for bills on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 8d. receive in full, and for telegraphic transfers about 32 per cent.; while those on Bombay, for bills only, receive about 89 per cent. Last week the allotment was made at 1s. 8 3-16d., so that the present reduction is equal to 3-16d. per rupee. The quotation for bar silver consequently declined, the nearest being 52d. to 52dd. per ounce, or fully 1d. lower than on Tuesday.

Summary and Rebielo.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, which has arrived, for a wonder, four days before its regular time, are—from Bombay, September 22; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, September 20; Calcutta, September 19.

20; Calcutta, September 19.

It is expected in India that the coming Railway Conference will "assume large proportions." The Pioneer understands that it will not be "a committee sitting round a table, but a congress divided into sections for the discussion of the various questions to be brought forward." It has not yet been settled who will preside; but Sir Andrew Clarke would certainly seem to be the natural president for an assembly of which he can hardly fail to be the guiding spirit. Perhaps, however, the new Finance Minister will be chosen to open the proceedings, in which at all events two or three members of Council will take part.

ANOTHER Conference, that on Prison Discipline, is to assemble in the cold weather at Calcutta, under the Presidency of Mr. T. C. Hope. The delegates of the Local Governments have not yet been named.

The shadow of an event announced in the latest telegrams is cast forward in the news received by this mail. We learn from the Allahabad paper that the reappearance of cholera in Kashmir had been anxiously watched by the Government in connection with the arrangements made for the Viceroy's tour. At Sialkot, at Jammu, in Srinagar itself, in fact, all along the route marked out for the tour, there had been a fresh outbreak of the disease. It must be remembered that the Viceroy's party would necessarily include a host of native campfollowers; and if cholera were to fasten on them the Governor-General might carry it with him all over India, and set it working in a dozen different places. When the mail left, there was still reason to hope that the outbreak would not be very serious, if indeed it was not already declining. That hope, as we know, has since been disappointed.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on September 14 the Sind Jaghirdars' and Zamindars' Relief Bill and the Bombay Municipal Debentures Bill were passed. The Railway Bill, introduced by Sir Andrew Clarke, was referred to a Select Committee. The Report on the Judicial Procedure Bill was again postponed. The Straits Settlement Emigration Bill, introduced by Mr. Hobhouse, was referred to a Select Committee. Mr. Arbuthnot obtained leave to introduce a Bill to enhance the dues leviable on vessels entering the Madras port. This Bill owes its origin to the harbour works now constructing in Madras.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Anjuman-i-Islam on Saturday, September 16, several lectures were delivered, after which one of the Mohammedan gentlemen present suggested the opening of a subscription for the relief of the Turkish wounded and the widows and orphans of those killed in the war. This being agreed to, it was decided that a special meeting of representatives of all classes of the Mohammedan community should be held on the following day. It was also resolved that the Empress of India should be petitioned by the Mohammedans of Bombay not to join the enemies of Turkey, but to support her against Russia and any of the other Great Powers in the event of war being declared by them against her.

It appears from a native paper that the chiefs of the independent Afridi tribes have had a friendly meeting, in which they agreed to bury their internal feuds until such time as their quarrel with the British Government shall have been satisfactorily adjusted. The ceremony which took place recals the way in which the Red Indians were wont to bury the war hatchet and smoke the pipe of peace. The Afridis literally buried a stone, selected from their rocky and barren hills, with many superstitious ceremonies, and wound up by solemnly swearing to abide faithfully by their vows. But Afghan and Afridi treachery is notorious.

THERE is something wrong after all, it seems, in the affairs of Jaipur, or else in the official reading of these affairs. Nawab Faiz Ali Khan Bahadur, K.C.S.I., is said to have arrived at Simla, for the purpose of "removing certain unfavourable impressions" formed by the Indian Government concerning acts of cruelty and oppression reported from the Jaipur State.

THE Madras Harbour Works seem to be having a hard struggle for existence with the monsoon. The first part of the works, a stone break-water, built of laterite, or, as others say, pebbles, had been carried a few feet beyond the beach, but further progress was stopped by the surf. On a single night several feet of these works were demolished by the waves, and the process of dissolution was going on gradually from day to day. A somewhat better rate of progress may be looked for after the close of the monsoon; but the works will have to be pushed forward with a little more energy than at present, and heavier material will have to be used if they are to withstand successfully the stormy weather of next year.

THE Pioneer this week sheds reassuring light on the statement quoted in our last issue about the loan of State engineers to the East Indian Railway. Such an arrangement did seem to indicate the desire of Government to contract future operations on the State lines, but further inquiry has "qualified this view." The engineers have been lent by the Government, not in order to get rid of them, but to give them practical experience, which may ultimately be useful in the service of the State. They will be seconded in their appointments, and are all entitled to revert to the Government service at stated periods.

It is dangerous to be over-zealous, even in the discharge of an apparent duty. Mr. Weld, a young Madras civilian, has been suspended, it seems, for two months for causing the exhumation of the body of a Brahman from the banks of the chief drinking water-tank, in accordance with the representations of the municipal surgeons. The Brahmans accused him of sacrilege. The Madras Government apologised for the insult to his sacred remains, and have given his relatives Rs. 800 for the expenses of a second burial.

A FEW more items may be grouped together:—The Yarkand Envoy was to reach Ambala on the 16th September and Simla on the 18th September.—According to the latest intelligence, perfect quiet prevailed throughout the Kohat Border.—The Fine Arts Exhibition opened at Simla on the 20th September.—The Maharajah of Patiala and his younger brother were still suffering from whooping-cough. The Maharajah is a very delicate child, and his case was causing anxiety to his doctor, Surgeon-Major Clark.—The Jhilam bridge was opened for public traffic on September 21.—Sir Lewis Pelly was everywhere named as successor to Sir H. Davies in the Punjab.

IF the Calcutta Statesman is rightly informed, a momentous question has been lately mooted in one of the Government departments, as to the expediency of introducing cats into the public service. It is believed that one officer has drawn up an exhaustive minute on the subject. The cats are to be pitted against the rats, which create such havoc amongst Government records. Poison was proposed; but the writer of the said minute recommends the more indirect process of employing cats, citing several instances in which this remedy has been found effectual. The Secretary's description of the zeal of Cawnpore cats, and their treatment of the Cawnpore rats, is—says our contemporary—"a caution—to rats. The Secretary has intimated that he possesses some very acute specimens of the feline tribe, and delicately offers to place the first litter at the disposal of Government for employment."

IT appears from the Pioneer that, in view of looming reductions in the public services, some members of the Instruction Department in the North-West Provinces are warranted in feeling no small anxiety as to the treatment they are likely to receive at the hands of the Government, when it shall have no further need of their services. These gentlemen belong to a graded service, and to what was supposed to be a permanent establishment. In respect of social position and intellectual qualifications, they have been drawn from the same class as the members of the junior Covenanted Civil Service, and, with very few exceptions, they are University men. And yet, remarks our contemporary, "if the Government adhere to the letter of the bond under which these gentlemen entered the service, it will be possible to treat them, we are told, precisely as if they were members of some petty ministerial establishment, drawing Rs. 15 per mensem, that is, the Government can send them adrift with the noble provision of one month's pay for every completed year of service. The gratuity clause in the Uncovenanted Pension Code was introduced into it twenty years ago. It may have been appropriate enough to the circumstances and constitution of the Uncovenanted Service then. It is monstrons to suppose that it can be held as being appropriate to them now." It must be borne in mind that the European officers, to whom in old days this gratuity clause applied, were of a lower social grade, belonging mostly to the supernumerary branches of the Public Works Department, who had no pretensions to any share in the privileges of the Covenanted Ser-It is true that economy is the need of the moment; but -as the Pioneer puts it-" no excess of financial difficulty has ever been held to justify a Government in repudiating its debts; and surely, among the most sacred obligations of a nation, is the duty of keeping from destitution men who have served her faithfully and well, and who, through no fault of their own, and while still capable of rendering many years of efficient and honourable service, find themselves suddenly without employment and forbidden to serve her any more.'

A CORRESPONDENT of the Delhi Gazette offers its readers the following free translation of "a manifesto distributed all over India a few months ago by the command of one Saiyid Ahmad, one of the custodians of Mahomet's tomb." It is comforting to find that the Jihád therein suggested has a purely moral instead of a political aim:—

moral instead of a political aim:—

By command of Mahomet, I, Shaik Ahmad, Khradim of the tomb of Mahomet at Medina, had concluded my prayers, and was engaged, at 2 p.M., in reading and meditating upon the Koran, when Mahomet appeared to me and said:—"Ahmad Hossain, my followers are sinning. Seventy thousand of them have died lately. Of that number only seven have died in the faith. In consequence of the prevalence of such sins as bribery, drunkenness, murder, forgery, adultery, &c., and the neglect of fasting during Ramzan, God withheld rain. My instructions previously given have not been heeded. Kings have not ruled justly. They have all become tyrannical. It has been revealed to me that my followers do not fear the anger of God, though the Day of Judgment is nigh. I prayed for the pardon of my people. It has been revealed to me that in 1295 H. darkness will cover the face of the earth. It will commence in the beginning of Jammadusani and continue to the middle of Rajab—a month and a half. During the prevalence of this dense darkness, Hazrat Imam Mehudi, the last of the prophets, will come to earth, and Jazrael will also come to take up the Koran. Whosoever will freely circulate this my revelation will be protected by me in the Day of Judgment. Whosoever doubts the revelation is an infidel and will go to hell." I have revealed the whole truth. If I am untrue may my face be blackened both in this world and in the next. People are desired to fast three days, and to break their fast by goor. After fasting three days they must seek forgiveness from God. Be constant in prayer; distribute alms; and circulate this document.

THE need for some amendments in the rules of the Forest Department in Oudh seems to be warranted by the fact that tenants who live in villages bordering on the forests not seldom leave home and go to Nepal, where they find greater facilities of pasturage and have comparatively little to pay. The rates of grazing in Oudh are so high that tenants can ill afford to pay them. For a few buffaloes nine annas a head are charged. Bulls, cows, oxen, and horses are charged at three annas each. Mules, ponies, and donkeys are charged at six pice each; sheep and goats at three pice, and even for cattle merely passing through the forests one-fourth of the rate is charged, which the Forest Department facetiously call dhul arai (raising the dust). In spite of these high rates the forest officers, according to the Pioneer, themselves admit that the damage done by the cattle is greater than the income derived from grazing dues. It is therefore not surprising to learn that the Oudh Government propose to remedy this unpleasant state of things by setting apart a certain quantity of waste land, called "shrub jungle," for grazing purposes, without charging the tenants anything for it. This would be handed over to the talukdars, who for the interests of their tenants will be glad to make, at their own cost, permanent protective barriers between the "shrub jungle" and the reserved Government forest. With regard to the evil of frequent fires the Oudh Administration Report for 1874-75 points out that "the occurrence of these fires cannot be prevented so long as the graziers have free access to the forests. Numbers of the rural population in the north of Oudh are dependent on their cattle for the means of subsistence, and unless ample grazing is made available to the people, many will migrate to Nepal, and, as a consequence, the land revenue will be seriously affected. A commission composed of a forest and a revenue officer is about to be appointed to take these matters into consideration, select suitable grazing grounds, and arrange for access to them. When this has been done, it will be possible rigidly to exclude the people from the rest of the forest." Complaints are also loudly made of the undue rigour displayed in punishing slight breaches of the forest laws. If a man, for instance, cuts a few leaves for his cattle, he suffers rigorous imprisonment for a month. In old days, as the Picneer reminds us, the talukdars wielded an absolute power over forests or waste lands adjoining their estates, and allowed their tenants to have free use of certain articles of forest produce, and to graze their cattle without any charge. Sometimes they built forts and camps in these forests, the remnants of which are still visible in some places, and there they lived for a considerable portion of the year.

It is also stated that the mode of levying the grazing-rate is so arbitrary and irregular, that a tenant has often to pay double and treble what he would have to pay if the rules were uniformly enforced. "He grazes a few head of cattle, and to ascertain the number, peons belonging to the Forest Department are deputed to count them. It can easily be conceived how these worthies perform this branch of their duties. They have no sense of responsibility, and too often act in the most haphazard and capricious manner. The tenants are too timid to bring these irregularities to the notice of the proper authorities." It is not the forest-officers who are to blame, but the system they have to work. There is, however—says our contemporary-" much reason to hope that a sound solution will be found by the commission, which ought soon to have completed its work. It is well composed. In the known sympathy of the revenue member, Captain Pitcher, for the agricultural classes, we have a sound guarantee that their claims will receive the fullest consideration.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Bombay paper gives the following sketch, "gathered from authentic sources," of State affairs in the little principality of Kotah during the last two years and a half. It is not an encouraging sample of native rule:

Immediately after taking over the reins of government, the Nawab had to find means to pay off the different establishments, many of which were as much as twenty-eight and thirty-two months in arrears, and the Governas much as twenty-eight and thirty-two months in arrears, and the Government tribute, together with the contribution for the Contingent. The total sum disbursed for these purposes amounted to about eight lakhs of rupees, and as the Treasury was totally empty, with the income of the year already anticipated by the improvident Chief and his ministers, a loan of six and a half lakhs had to be contracted, which, however, has long ago been paid off. Alienations and mal-administration for a series of years in the past had gradually lessened the Khalsa income, till it amounted to about half that of Zalim Sing's time. The State was also encumbered with a heavy debt, contracted by both the late and the present Chief; the non-payment of the instalments of interest since the accession of the latter was taken advantage of by the banker creditors to charge compound latter was taken advantage of by the banker creditors to charge compound interest by having these accumulations of interest added to principal, and obtaining fresh bonds in collusion with the men who came to power from obtaining fresh bonds in collusion with the men who came to power from time to time, and who largely profited by these transactions. It is difficult to imagine how rapidly the public debt expanded within a dozen years or so by this process. Some thousand of rupees swelled into lakhs by collusion and fraud within an inconceivably short time. Curious revelations would take place if the officers of Government can only find out what portion of these loans actually reached the State Treasury, and what portion meltad away during the process of the money being carried from the tion melted away during the process of the money being carried from the chests of the bankers to those of the State.

It is likely enough that the constant changes of political officers have told much against the success of the experiment begun in 1874, when the government of Kotah was placed under the supreme charge of the present Dewán, Nawab Faiz Ali Khan, the Chief himself being wholly set aside for incompetence. First of all, Sir Lewis Pelly went away on three months' leave, only four months after the Dewan's appointment, and again on furlough a short time after his return. Captain Berkeley left when the new régime had just begun work. For about six months a military officer, the Commandant of the Irregular Force, remained in charge. Colonel Wright, who was appointed permanently, did not go to Dioli till the latter end of March, 1875, and was transferred to Jaipur after a fortnight. It was not till the middle of April, 1875, that Captain Muir became substantive Political Agent of

THE Times Correspondent telegraphs the following particulars of the torpedo explosion which took place on the Hughli off Calcutta on Wednesday, October 4:-

Last year the ship British Viceroy sank at her moorings off the Strand road, within 200 yards of the crowded streets in the business quarter of the town. The wreck impeded the navigation, and the Torpedo Commission undertook to blow it up. Two fruitless attempts were made on Monday. On Wednesday a torpedo boat, containing 1,000 lb. of gunpowder, was anchored on the spot, preparing for a third attempt. Sergeant Harrison, Royal Engineers, and thirteen natives were on board. About two o'clock Harrison was seen hammering a wooden plug with a fuse through it into an iron cylinder containing 400 lb. of powder. He called for some melted wax to make the plug watertight. A native melted some wax in an iron ladle over a fire in the !jolly boat alongside, and handed the ladle to Sergeant Harrison, who twice again called for more. As the ladle was being handed to him for the third time an explosion occurred. No traces have been found of Harrison and eight of the crew. Four others and some persons in neighbouring boats and on shore were injured, and one is since dead. Together with 200 lb. of powder blown uninjured into the Strand-road, half a human trunk was found and a head in Hare-street. Fragments of flesh and limbs and pieces of iron were scattered along the Last year the ship British Viceroy sank at her moorings off the Strand Strand-road, half a human trunk was found and a head in Hare-street. Fragments of flesh and limbs and pieces of iron were scattered along the Strand. All the windows in the vicinity were broken and some walls were cracked, but no very serious damage was done to property. The torpedo boat sank at once. Until it is raised it is impossible to say whether the whole cargo of powder in the hold exploded, but probably not, or the damage would have been much more serious. The total killed consists of Sergeant Harrison and eight natives. There were twelve natives injured, one of whom has died in the hospital. The explosion was heard all over Calcutta, and a thick volume of smoke was seen from a long distance. The coroner's inquest commences this week, but it probably will not elicit much information, as the only persons who could explain the immediate cause of the explosion were killed.

It does seem strange, as the Times Correspondent remarks, "that in a port where there is a strict rule that ships shall not have more than five pounds of powder on board, a boat with

1,000 lbs. should be allowed to lie amid shipping and close to the shore." It is strange, too, "that the charge of a boat with such a freight should be left to one non-commissioned officer and native Lascars, and that a jolly boat with a fire on board should be kept alongside."

From the same source we learn that at the grand Darbar lately held at Haidarabad the Resident presented the Viceroy's invitation to the Nizam to attend the Delhi Assemblage. It is rumoured that the Nizam will not attend, but will send a deputation, headed by Sir Salar Jung, and that the Resident, who has started for Simla, goes to consult the Viceroy on the sub-

ACCORDING to the latest telegrams the following arrangements for the command of the troops at the Delhi Assemblage have been notified:—Cavalry Division—Major-General C. Chamberlain, Colonel Graves, Lieutenant-Colonel Annesley. Artillery Division-Colonel Evans. First Infantry Division-Major-General Brind, Brigadier-Generals Biddulph, Dempster, and Macpherson. Second Infantry Division-General Hardinge, Brigadier-Generals Browne, Phayre, and Rothney; Deputy Surgeon-General Meason, principal medical officer; Colonel Sibley, Deputy Commissary-General; Lieutenant-Colonel Howey, Provost Marshal. Sindia and Holkar will each bring a considerable body of troops. It is stated that much jealousy exists among the chiefs on the question of precedence; for instance, the Maharajah of Udaipur declines to sit below the Gaikwar. It will certainly need much tact to settle these three points. We cannot see why the mushroom State of Baroda should rank above the long-descended and long-established princes of the oldest State in Rajputana; especially as Baroda has no more weight in the modern Indian system than Udaipur.

IT appears from recent telegrams that Colonel Colley, the Viceroy's military secretary, has started for Khelat on a special mission to arrange a meeting between the Khan and the Viceroy in Sind. It is difficult to see why the matter should not be settled through Major Sandeman, who is still at Khelat.

From the Times telegram we learn that a meeting of the Calcutta Mohammedans was held in the Town-hall on Saturday last. The object was stated to be as follows: - For a demonstration of sympathy with Turkey in her endeavours to maintain territorial and sovereign integrity, and for an expression of the loyal attachment of the Indian subjects of the Mohammedan persuasion to her Gracious Majesty the Queen of England and Empress of India, and of gratitude to her Imperial Majesty and her people for the support and aid rendered to her old ally the Sublime Porte.

In a recent essay on "England's Mission to India," which appeared in the Revue des deux Mondes, Count Goblet d'Alviella embodies the fruits of his own experiences, as gathered during his visit to India in the wake of the Prince of Wales. Among other things said in our favour he avows a strong ad miration for the improvements which we are gradually introducing in the marriage laws; for the protection we afford to creeds older than our own; and especially for the education everywhere so liberally and cheaply provided. In Bengal alone there are, he says, "1,124 scholarships of different We know no civilised nation where talent has such kinds! chance of fair-play in the organisation of popular instruction, whatever the rank, class, or fortune in which it occurs, and we can frankly affirm that among the European States no government could, without being taxed with socialism, intervene in such a liberal fashion to facilitate and foster poverty-stricken genius." He marvels at our efforts in public works, our railways, and roads, and irrigation systems, and the material prosperity which these things have produced, and will yearly still much more produce; and he boldly maintains that in the last twenty years we have made a deeper impression upon the country and its future progress than all the old dynasties together, with their wonderful temples, and tanks, and palaces. He confesses that we have already thrown open almost as many appointments to the natives as could fairly be expected, and that in fact we do govern "India for India." In drawing a just parallel between our Indian Empire and that of old Rome, the Count finds to our especial credit, that while at Rome the final aim of the Government was the profitable exploitation of the people for the benefit of a town, of a class, or of a man, England, for the first time in the world's history, "affords an example of a government organised by the con-querors for the welfare of the conquered population."

THE MARQUIS OF TWEEDDALE, who died the other day, in his ninetieth year, was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Madras from 1842 to 1848. During that time his Lordship's excessive zeal for his religion displayed itself, among other things, in an order establishing the Bible as a class-book in all Government schools. The natives, it is true, were protected by a kind of conscience clause; but an order so offensive to native feeling provoked, if we mistake not, a burst of popular resentment in Tinnevelly; and the appeals forwarded to the India House against such a departure from its former policy were not made in vain. The obnoxious order had to be quietly withdrawn, but the suspicions aroused by it were not so easily allayed.

Colonel Johnson was an ensign of 1846, and a brevet-major of 1858. He served with distinction in the Burmese War of 1852-53 and in the Indian Mutiny Campaigns of 1857-58.

THE BODEN PROFESSOR OF SANSKRIT ON TOUR.

PROFESSOR MONIER WILLIAMS starts to day for Madras, on a second visit in furtherance of his scheme for founding at Oxford an Indian Institute, where "all persons engaged in Indian studies" may meet together, and which would thus develop "among both Englishmen and Indians a better knowledge of and more sympathy with each other," besides giving "an impulse and encouragement to Oriental research." It seems that the University itself can do no more at present to that end than offer a site for the proposed buildings. The Colleges also have no money to spare, and private charity must therefore be inwoked in both countries. The subscriptions hitherto promised make up only a twentieth of the whole amount required; but Mr. Williams believes that "the Indian Governments, and some of the enlightened Maharajas and eminent men of India may be induced to contribute towards the erection of an Indian Institute, provided that a fair proportion of the requisite funds be raised in England." We may also fairly expect "that money may be forthcoming in this country for such an object, when it is remembered that the Taylor Institution, the Bodleian and Radcliffe Libraries, the Sheldonian Theatre, and nearly every College in Oxford owe their foundation to the munificence of private individuals.'

With such aims and expectations the Boden Professor of Sanskrit has set off to "finish the work connected with his professorial duties, which he could not complete last winter." Whatever doubts there may be as to some of the results anticipated by the zealous projector of this scheme, we wish him all the success he deserves, and trust that, on his return home next spring, he may bring with him good news of labour well bestowed.

TURKISH BARBARISM.

THE attempt so often made to connect the barbarities committed in Bulgaria by Turks, Circassians, and Bashi-Bazouks with the religion professed by their authors seems to be a very rash deduction from imperfect and erroneous data. It is hardly less unfair to Islam to saddle it with these and similar outrages than it would be unfair to Christianity to make it answerable for all the atrocities which from time to time have been perpetrated by so-called Christians. Cruelty under the cloak of religion has been common alike to the most peaceful and the most aggressive of all creeds. If some men are better than their religion, others are manifestly worse. It would not perhaps be quite impossible to match the tale of Turkish savagery with the exploits of Chinese Buddhists, or the sufferings of Christian heretics in Provence and Spain, and the France of Louis XIV. It may be hard to decide whether the slow torture of impalement is less tolerable than the quicker agony of death by fire at the stake. Islam is not the only religion which has produced fanatics and persecutors, or seemed to encourage the worst passions that ever held carnival on this earth. Nana Sahib was a "mild Hindu," and Akbar, the most merciful of rulers, a Mohammedan. Harún-al-Rashid was a good deal more humane than Charlemagne. If we come down to the people at large, the police reports of Christian England show little cause for boasting of our superior humanity as compared with the benighted followers of the Korán. Nor can it be laid down as an absolute rule that Mohammedan States have shown no capa city for political progress; however true it may be that their principles of government are ill-suited to the march of modern ideas. It is not in Turkey alone that the head of the Government is also the head of the National Church, and the evils of Papal rule in Italy were little less glaring than are those of Turkish rule in Europe at the present time. On the other hand, the Mohammedan Arabs in Spain proved themselves no mean proficients in the arts and polity of civilised life; and some at least of the Pathan and Moghal rulers of India governed their dominions with marked ability and an enlightened regard for the general weal. The memory of Akbar is still revered by Hindus as well as Moslems; and even Aurangzib, with all his bigotry, was an administrator of the highest order, according to the lights of his day. In some parts of Africa Mohammedan rule has at least raised the people from the lowest depths of brutish barbarism.

We should therefore look to other causes than religion alone for the stagnation of political life in Turkey and the barbarities of which we have heard so much. Race, for instance, must be taken largely into account. In respect of the cruelties lately brought home to them, the Ottoman Turks betray their kinship with the ferocious Turkmans of Central Asia, and their descent from the same Tatar stock which produced Attila, Chingiz, and Timur. It seems historically certain that some races, like some individuals, are more prone to cruelty than others, and in this respect the Tatar races have always held an evil preeminence. Four centuries of troubled rule in Europe have done little to soften down this trait in the Turkish character. In spite of Musurus Pasha, and of ordinances put forth to please the Western Powers, it seems pretty clear that the barbarous punishments of former days are still enforced, and that suspected rebels still undergo the prolonged torture of impaling, a process always characteristic of Tatar States. It was a common enough penalty even in India under some of the Moghal rulers, and recent evidence shows that in Turkey it has not yet been laid aside. As for the many other stories which have lately made our papers such hideous reading, we are only surprised that so much pains should have been vainly taken to discredit them, or at least to cap them with stories of Russian ferocity in We have yet to Turkistan and of Slavic devilry in Bulgaria. learn at any rate that Russian soldiers are in the habit of impaling prisoners, roasting them slowly alive, and treating help. less girls as they were treated a few months ago, if not later, by the Turks and their allies. That the political barbarism of Turkey is not altogether due to her religion, we have already shown. It may be more fairly ascribed to national character, to the faulty systems of Government adopted, and to the circumstances under which the conquered provinces have been held. The Turks have always shown far more capacity for war and conquest than for peaceful industry and wise statesmanship.

THE SALT TAX.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I find the following in a precis of Mr. Juland Danvers's Report on Indian Railways for the past year, published in page 979 of your Paper of the 30th ult.:—"The lowering of the rates for salt on the Eastern Bengal Railway has already resulted in an immense increase of traffic, exceeding 100 per cent. on the previous year."

Let us consider for a moment what this means. It does not, I believe, mean that the increased quantities of English salt sent from Calcutta have taken the place of any other description of chloride of sodium, but that consumption of edible salt in some parts of Eastern Bengal has doubled in one year, owing to reduction in price caused by cheap carriage. Conceive what the consumption of salt would be if Government were to content itself with a tax of 200 per cent. ad valorem instead of, as at present, exacting more than 600 per cent.

at present, exacting more than 600 per cent. While we heartily praise the wisdom of the Railway Company in providing cheap carriage, what can we say of a Government which raises the price of salt to so exorbitant a rate that the mass of its subjects cannot afford to buy more than one-half of the quantity which is absolutely required for health? for no one buys more salt than is required for the health of himself, his family, his cows, and his bullocks.

What a glorious name that statesman will earn who will enable millions of our poor subjects to resist cholera and leprosy by eating table salt in the place of Glauber's salts, which latter Government has not yet taxed, and which is obtained in great abundance in India, but which predisposes the human frame to disease, and which has to be forced down the throats of sheep to prevent their eating ordure for the sake of the particles of salt contained therein.

A railroad has recently been constructed from Agra westward to Ajmeer. Can you inform us to what extent the consumption of salt has increased in the North-West Provinces, owing to the cheap means of carriage thus provided from the Sambhor Salt lake?

Government fancies that the Salt Tax affords the only means of taxing the poor; but in exorbitantly taxing a necessary of life it should assure itself that its poor subjects have the means of paying for it. A tax on the poor heartlessly and inconsiderately levied is likely to cause grave political evils. Many Englishmen fancy that the inhabitants of Bengal are cowards, and will never fight. Hear what Dr. Hunter has written. The Indian Government has officially declared that there are twenty-one millions of Mohammedans in Bengal:—

The fanatical Musalmans of the Delta bear the name not of Wahábis' but of Farasis, or the men of exalted faith. They call themselves the New Musalmans, and muster in vast numbers in the districts east of Calcutta. We have already seen how, in 1831, a merely local leader got together between three and four thousand men, beat back a detachment of the Calcutta militia, and was only put down by regular troops. In 1843 the sect had attained such dangerous proportions as to form a subject of special inquiry by Government. The head of the Bengal police reported that a single one of their preachers had gathered together some eighty thousand followers, who asserted complete equality among themselves, looked upon the cause of each as that of the whole sect, and considered nothing criminal if done in behalf of a brother in distress. . . . . At this moment the cost of watching the Wahabis, and keeping them within bounds, amounts in a single province to as much as would suffice for the administration, judicial and criminal, of a British district containing one-third of the whole population of Scotland.—Page 99 of Hunter's "Our Indian Musalmans."

Your obedient servant, October 4.

THE OUTLAY ON PUBLIC WORKS.

The Pioneer, referring to Mr. Dacosta's criticisms, need hardly say that it has never been an admirer of the system which divides the public expenditure into Ordinary and Extraordinary; but since the estimates every year show the one as well as the other, and distinctly record the fact that, including the latter view, there has been a deficit, it hardly needed a reference to the Economist to make the discovery. And without entering into the question whether it be a wise policy or the reverse to borrow money for public works, it may be remarked that M1. Dacosta's criticism would have been still more complete and exhaustive if he had not omitted to mention that he is judging India by a standard which, if applied to England, would bring the latter equally within the category of pauper bankrupt countries. When the English telegraphs were purchased by the State, the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not make out a deficit of nine millions in his estimates, nor was anything said in the English estimates about the money spent on the dockyard fortifications. The fact is the Indian Government has drawn upon itself a good deal of criticism, often of a much more forcible kind than that of Mr. Dacosta, by its praiseworthy scrupulousness in publishing its obligations. If it had dealt with its loans for public works in the same way as the money raised through the agency of the guaranteed railway companies was dealt with, probably Mr. Dacosta would never have made his wonderful discovery. Indeed, it may be taken as a sample of his exhaustive treatment of Indian finance, that while he takes such high ground about the loans raised directly by the Government for State railways, he passes over the loans of vastly larger amounts raised indirectly through the agency of the guaranteed railway companies without comment. It need hardly be said that the one class of expenditure is just as much a loan as the other, the only difference being that whereas the Government used to borrow its money at five per cent. through the indirect agency, it now borrows it directly at four. If Mr. Dacosta's criticism is worth anything, the Government has been suffering under a chronic state of gigantic deficits ever since the year 1848, and now amounting to about a hundred millions. By parity of reasoning, the London and North-Western, and all the other great English lines of railway, are equally in a state of hopeless insolvency; all their works have been constructed with borrowed money, and in not a single year has the revenue sufficed for the expenditure on extensions, all of which has most improperly been defrayed by additions to the capital account.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE WRONG PLACE.

The Pioneer observes that so long as the expenditure is dangerously high, and the India-office positively refuses to reduce the home charges, so long it is the undoubted duty of the Government of India in the Financial Department to keep a watchful eye on the outlay of public money in India. But this view of matters is too simple and modest for an officiating (and aspiring) Lieutenant-Governor. With proverbial ardour he addresses his subordinates in tones where suppliant prayers are "shot" with threatening imprecations. Hysteries and epigrams are alike lavishly employed; and it is pretty clearly intimated that the "sacrifices" to be offered to the alarms of "India" are to be supplied chiefly by the lowest and most helpless of its public servants. The letter begins by saying that the local Government "are given pretty plainly to understand that it will be necessary to make considerable reductions" in the provincial allotments. As we have already shown, the resolution shows nothing of the sort. This, we are further told, is a case in which no half measures "of the cheese-paring type" will suffice. The application, nevertheless, of such bold doctrines is far less sweeping. It is apparent that chow-kidars, constables, and clerks are items in regard to which "administrative reform" is to be chiefly exercised. "For the individuals or classes whose services can now well be dispensed with may have done good work in their day." Why these deserving public servants should good work in their day." Why these deserving public servants should be thus suddenly discarded is not clear. It cannot be that the sudden depreciation of the rupee has in a few weeks loaded their locks with silver. They have not become superannuated "in a single night," like the prisoner of Chillon. They are probably as efficient and as "useful" (to use the word given in this connection in the text) as they were in the earlier days of July. And even when they are superannuated, no reason is shown why their places should not be filled up. But the Secretary to Government goes on to use an argument ad homines, by saying that no one knows so well as his correspondents where extensive reductions can be made. Is this much to the purpose? Many of the gentlemen addressed might be of opinion that the salaries of certain highly placed officials would admit of some considerable diminution. Others may very likely regard the maintenance of a complete Governmental machinery for Madras and Bombay as a luxury with which an insolvent population could dispense. But the minor agents of administration—the watchmen who guard the streets by night, the writers who keep the public records by day—all these establishments have been surely estimated by sensible men of our predecessors. Work has not since then diminished. The reduction of the numbers of these employés, on any scale likely to be productive of important saving, must necessarily fetter and impair the efficiency of the administration, and so come into the category of those economies which will "cause disproportionate loss and waste." In the hands of "zealous" but injudicious subordinates, of whom there is no lack in the N. W. P., the circular is therefore calculated to cause incurable mischief. We have said is therefore calculated to cause incurable mischief. We have said nothing that we have not felt to be a strict and painful duty. We welcomed Sir G. Couper's accession. We believe him to be able, welcomed Sir G. Couper's accession. honest, and resolute. But he should beware of putting hasty notes into Secretaries' office-boxes trusting to those gentlemen to cast them into shape. And he should study great questions in all their bearings before endeavouring to make political capital out of them.

INDIAN AND ENGLISH PENSIONS.

The Times of India holds that the Indian pension rules are far too antiquated, and require remodelling on principles totally different from those which guided the board of directors and their advisers when these now antiquated rules were first framed; in that day hardly any appointments in the Uncovenanted Civil Service in this country were held by Europeans, much less by English gentlemen; the bulk of the appointments were filled by natives, and, moreover, by a totally different class of natives from the majority of those (in the higher appointments) of the present day. At this time there are many superior natives in the Uncovenanted Service who suffer under hardships similar to those which afflict their European brethren. In the remodelling of the rules one broad principle should be observed—the division of the Uncovenanted Service into two clearly divided grades, viz.—1st, superior officers, including Europeans and natives, who hold higher appointments; and, 2nd, all others, who hold what may be termed subordinate, clerical, and menial positions. The Blue-books, from which our facts have been taken, show that a clerk in the India-office is allowed to count service for pension from the age of nineteen; here in India no one can count until they have attained twenty-two years; and we could give many instances of officers who have served before that age, and consequently lose so much of their actual Indian service. In addition to the advantage enjoyed by employes in the India-office in London as compared with officers similarly employed in India, as shown above, we may name the following amongst many other anomalous and most unjust distinctions that exist between the two services, or more correctly speaking, between two classes of men serving in the one service, the only difference being that one set of men are fortunate enough to serve in their own healthy climate, amongst their own kith and kin, with all the pleasant adjuncts of London life, whilst the others are plodding away in this country. The distinctions are briefly: an India-office clerk in London has a claim to a pension on failure of health on completing ten years' service, an Uncovenanted Civil servant in this country has no such claim until he has served fifteen years in India, that being exclusive of all sick leave and furlough. An Indian-office employé in London has a yearly increased pension, by annual increments counting after ten years' service; his less fortunate confrere in India has no pension at all until after fifteen years' actual service, and no increase whatever until ten more years are passed, making a total of twenty-five years' actual service. The Blue-books quoted show that India-office clerks at home have been allowed to retire on pension after only fourteen years' service; with that service no one in a similar position in India would be allowed any pension at all, and no Uncovenanted Indian civilian can claim a pension until he has served thirty years in India, exclusive of all leave. The home Indian official gets his pension in pounds sterling, no matter how low the rate of exchange may be; those in India (excluding the Covenanted Civil Service) get their's in rupees, so that by the time their pensions reach them they are less than they should be by from twenty to twenty-five per cent. We might point a moral by showing how easily some of the increased "home charges" are accounted for when we see handsome pensions granted in the manner above shown; but in the absence of particulars of the services of the gentlemen concerned we do not care to do so, as good public service should always, in our opinion, be rewarded by just and liberal pensions, so long as marked injustice to other members of the public service is not allowed to remain unredressed, as we are sorry to add it has been in these instances.

The Patiala Rajah.—We are glad to hear from Patiala that the illness of the Maharajah is not of a very serious nature. Surgeon Major A. Clarke was sent from Ambala to attend upon his Highness, and pronounced the disease to be whooping-cough; the younger Prince is also suffering in a mild degree from the same disease, and both being delicate children they will require medical care for some time.—Pionecc.

SUICIDE.—A most determined case of suicide was committed yesterday evening at about seven o'clock in the tank at Wellesley-square. A Mr. Williamson, who has for some time been on bad terms with his wife, had been out all day drinking with a couple of friends. The two walked up to the tank in the evening, and just at the time they came up to the steps leading down into the tank, they saw Mrs. Williamson and two other of her friends at the gate on the opposite side. A few minutes afterwards, Mr. Williamson, without warning his friends, made a run down the steps and plunged into the water, clothes, hat, boots and all. The policeman on duty called out to him to come back, but the man would not listen. He continued swimming for about a couple of minutes. The policeman, who was a great deal frightened, as he knew the man was in liquor, stripped and went into the water. Williamson then turned and appeared to be swimming on his back, and was then sen to push his cap with one hand firmly on his head, and sank. The hat floated down, and a crowd soon gathered when the policeman used stoutly for help. The Superintendent was soon on the spot, and eight or nine policemen and a couple of Europeans went in and dired for the body. It was of no avail. So the tank had a guard put on, and the search for the body will be resumed to-day.—Calentia Fratesman, Sept. 5.

A EUROPEAN BURGLAR.

It had been a matter of common notoriety at Dehra that burglaries were committed by a gang who had two European members. At last, a few nights ago, when a nautch was going on in the bunniah's quarter at Dehra, some females were heard to scream in one of the houses, and a rush was made there. A plucky chowkidar stationed himself on the road below the house, and as one of the thieves—for a burglary had been interrupted by the women screaming—dropped from the roof on to the road, he sprang forward to seize him. He received a blow, but retaliated on the thief with such effect that he floored him. The other thieves endeavoured to get their wounded comrade away, and battered the chowkidar about, but he held on to his prisoner like a man, and as lights were approaching and a crowd of people, they had to make off, and leave him behind. When lights came it was found that the prisoner, though dressed as a native, was really a European, though the hue of his limbs, combined with his native attire, made him pass muster in a moderate light for a native. He was taken to the lockup, and at the time he seemed pretty well, but complained of a pain in the back of his neck. Nothing, however, was discovered or indeed discoverable as showing that he had sustained any dangerous injuries. A little more than a week after his capture, and while his trial was in progress, an adjournment having been allowed, as he appeared ill while the case was being heard, he sudanowed, as ne appeared in wine the case was being heard, he suddenly died of concussion of the brain. And now comes the really lamentable part of this story. Had his relatives been wisely and sensibly advised, they would have buried him, and hushed up the whole matter in profound silence. Europeans in India feel the tie of race and blood much more strongly than at home; and no one, I feel convinced, would have raked up the past against the poor fellow after his death, but would have been content to believe that if he had erred, as he undoubtedly did err, there were many circumstances in his case which palliated his wrong-doings, and he had at all events paid for them with his life. I say again, no generous-minded person—and I am proud to say that such persons abound up here—would ever have alluded to the subject in any way that could possibly have wounded the feelings of his relatives directly or indirectly. But unhappily his relatives were not inclined to let the matter rest, and a petition was presented to the magistrate of the district, praying him to inquire into the cause of death, and determine whether death had not been accelerated by his being put hurriedly on his trial when very ill, and whether also death was not attributable to gross neglect on the part of the medical officer. The magistrate proceeded to Dehra and held an inquest, and after a most careful investigation decided that none of the authorities whom the petition was directed against were to blame, and that death had been justifiably caused by the chowkidar while in the execution of his duty. It was alleged that the deceased on the night of his capture had been drinking freely in the town of Dehra with several people, and then left them, and wandered about, and that when he was incapable or almost so from the effects of liquor, some enemies of his led him to the road under the bunniah's house, stripped him of his European clothes, and put native ones on him, and then raised a cry of "thieves," and a melie ensued, during which he received the blow or blows from the chowkidar, which ultimately caused his death. This account was not at all a probable one, and was therefore rejected, and the whole affair has now acquired a most unhappy notoriety. It is a most painful thing to think that a European, the son of a good and honourable gentleman, who happily for himself died many years ago, could be engaged in such practices, but still more painful to see that the whole matter might have been quietly disposed of without unnecessary prominence being given to it, and that instead of this it was blazoned abroad owing to an unhappy perverseness. It is to be hoped that the whole matter will now be allowed to sink into oblivion, for no good can be done by making it more notorious still,—Pioneer Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

Peshawar, Sept. 3.— Although the sensation caused at Cherat by the murder that I reported to you last week is subsiding a little, yet nervous people find the night made to them altogether hideous by the amount of popping that goes on. To walk about the station without a lantern at night is nearly certain death, as even the sound of a footstep is sufficient to make the sentries blaze away. It is said that the man or men who murdered McLean have been prowling about the same spot where they committed the crime, and that one night they were fired at, and notwithstanding that the guard turned out they again got away. But this seems to be very improbable. Very possibly some men were about the place, but as the nurderers were never seen on the night when they fired the fatal shot, it seems to me a matter rather difficult to understand how they were recognised. It is not very likely that men, with a price set upon their heads, would care to run their necks into such a certain noise. Many people connect the late murder with the Affridi business, and think that the hill-men intend attacking the place; but this is absurd, and in my opinion the ruffans who shot their man on the 20th of last month had not come with any intention to take life, but being under the impression that they were about to be taken prisoners they simply fired to prevent the guard being turned out, well knowthey simply fried to prevent the guard being turned out, well knowing that a shot at night at Cherat was a thing of such frequent occurrence that probably no notice would be taken of it, and they were right. As for caring whom they shot, such a thing never entered their heads, as potting a Feringhee to them is no more than for one of us to knock over a black buck. During the last few days intimation has been given that the Hussun Kheyl Affridis have been included in the blockade, and that no one from their villages is to be allowed to gone into our territory. How the difference will executable he set come into our territory. How the difference will eventually be settled seems to become every day a greater mystery. One thing is pretty plain,-that there is no likelihood of the hill-men giving in, without they are forced to do so; and I suppose, now that the Hussen Kheyl lot have been put into the blockade, they and the actual pass men will give trouble during the cold weather. nothing of any intended expedition against them, and I do not think there is any probability of any notice being taken of them, unless they commit themselves by actually showing fight, which they will not do anywhere but from behind their own rocks and on the slopes of their own hills. They are applied around the slopes of their own hills. They are sensible enough not to care to come to terms with us on the plain. By fighting with them there is so very little to be gained that it is hardly worth taking the trouble of turning out a force against them. This, I daresay, they pretty well know themselves. However, things ought to be settled somehow or other this cold weather.

MUSSOORIE. - Sept. 4 .- An event has recently taken place here, which is almost without parallel in Indian history. Mr. Walter Macleane, a civilian of a few months' standing only, has disappeared under the following extraordinary circumstances:—Mr. Macleane came to Dehra at the end of last March, and lived in a profuse, princely way there, keeping open house and entertaining everybody. As his style of living excited a good deal of comment, he felt that the must account for living at a rate which exceeded his pay quite four-fold, and he accordingly gave out that he had a fair private income of his own, and that he had married a Parisian actress of some fame on the stage, who was making a fortune, which she shared with him. About the end of June he resolved to take short leave on urgent private affairs, and after some little difficulty left this place for Calcutta on the 23rd July. Before going, he cashed several bills, aggregating about £3,000, on Coutts and Co. and other firms, at some of the local banks and otherwise, and made over to one of the banks a despatch-box which he said contained papers of the utmost value to him, being title-deeds to his property and articles of literary partnerships with Dumas and others. A fortnight passed by, and no one heard anything of him; three weeks, and there was still silence; and when four weeks had almost matured, telegrams from home announced to the luckless holders of the bills on Courts, &c., that they had been dishonoured, as there was no account of his anywhere. One of the banks knew that a Calcutta bank had cashed £1,200 worth of their drafts for him, and so the telegraph was again put into requisition, and information sought as to his whereabouts in the City of Palaces. The reply was that he had not arrived there yet, but that he was expected daily, as his servant was there. A suggestion was then made that he had never intended to go to Calcutta at all, so the bank there was telegraphed to know how the draft had been cashed, and the reply was through a Bombay firm. This firm was telegraphed to for particulars, and they replied that on July 31 they had cashed the drafts which were presented by Mr. Macleane in person. When this information was received, the bank desired to open the lox, and took it to the cutcherry, desiring to give official sanction to their proceedings. This was distinctly refused them; so taking the responsibility on their own shoulders they opened the box before witnesses, and found inside two envelopes sealed and superscribed. The lesser one was first opened, and its contents were a price list of Messrs. Davis and Co.'s (of Calcutta) goods, three old circulars of the Board of Revenue, and an official letter. The greater one was now ripped open, and the absentee's covenants with the Secretary of State for India and a missionary's card were all the contents. This rubbish had been guarded for some months most sedulously at the bank, as the manager looked on the box as a little Eldorado. I fear his feelings must have been too much for him when he gazed at Davis and Co.'s price list, and that he could hardly appreciate the joke, which, it must be confessed, was an excellent one. This is all the story; and I don't suppose Mr. Macleane is likely to trouble India again, nor that anyone is likely to go to the expense of bringing him back again. It is a curious fact that before he left he asked several persons most searching questions. that before he left he asked several persons most searching ques-tions about extradition, and as to the distinction between commercial and criminal fraud, alleging that he was about to write a book, the hero in which was to play exactly the same rôle that the author to be has played. He was a curious character; all his ways, manners, and behaviour being intensely French, and his great art in making himself appear to be perfectly careless about money matters, and without any idea as to the value of that medium of exchange. And to such an extent did he carry this that he was often remonstrated with quite affectionately on account of his reckless expenditure. But he was a very sharp fellow indeed, and this pretended carelessness was the very best bait he could have thrown out, as pretty sharp people bit at it readily, thinking they were making a good thing out of him, while all the time they were being done brown themselves. One cannot pity people of this kind much.-Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

INDIGO OUT-TURN. - We learn that the indigo out-turn in the Jessore and Kishnaghur districts has proved most disappointing; the crops in themselves were splendid and most promising, but the yield from the plant has been very unsatisfactory; the average out-turn per 1,000 bundles generally runs from eight to ten maunds, whereas this year from four to five has only been obtained.—Indian Daily News, Sept. 5.

DENGUE IN LUCKNOW .- Dengue has now invaded the Lucknow cantonment in force, and in one battery alone, that of B.A., there were the other day close upon thirty men in hospital suffering under this peculiarly depressing and annoying ailment. The singular part of the affair is that the disease is almost entirely confined to the battery in question, but it is too much to assert that the immunity enjoyed by the other batteries, corps, and regiments is to be continued to the end of the chapter.

Swar News .- Mian Gul, the Akhund's eldest and rebellious sen, has arrived at Bonair from Kashgar; and in anticipation of his father's expected demise, has assumed the title of Shah-Aftabdin. and is engaged in trying to get together forces for the expressed purpose of carrying on a religious war. The Ahkund has received a specie remittance of Rs. 30,000, which has been presented to him, as a religious offering, by his disciples in the Punjab; he is still ill, and it is said that his health is daily getting worse.—Indian Public Opinion, Sept. 9.

Maharajah of Bhartpar, at Longwood, last evening. Lord Lytton was escorted by a guard of honour from the Goorkhas. The Maharajah had made extensive preparations to receive the Viceroy, and trusted he would have honoured him by partaking of refreshments, and remaining long enough to have witnessed the illuminations which were arranged; but Lord Lytton left before sunset, having made but a short stay. The Maharajah proposes curtailing his visit to Simla, and starts for Bhartpur on the 10th inst. - Civil and Military Gazette, Sept. 2.

Mr. J. Robinson, Assistant in the Accountant-General's office, Lahore, who was lately reported as having suddenly disappeared from that station, no one knows whither, has not yet turned up, though his leave, of which he had one month granted him on the 6th ult., expired a few days ago, and the local paper now considers it almost a matter of certainty that he has, perhaps in a temporary fit of insanity, made away with himself. At all events, no information as to what has become of him has yet been received, though the police, all over the Punjab, have been on the look-out for some time past for any body answering the missing man's description.

CHOLERA AT GUJARAT.—We understand that cholera is bad at Gujarat; on the 28th ult. there were seventeen new cases. The medical man on cholera duty at Gujarat is Dr. Aitchison, of Ladak celebrity. This gentleman has had a very hard time of it, considering that when, as we announced some issues ago, he went on leave for three months to Murree he was put on cholera duty during a very bad epidemic for five weeks, and is now enjoying the rest of his leave in the discharge of a similar function at Gujarat. However, good men are rare, and Government and the public are quite right to lay their hands on them, irrespective of any secrifice of private convenience.—Indian Public Opinion.

A DOMESTIC SCANDAL.—The case of Mis. Florence Palmer against her husband and mother-in-law, for assault and wrongful confinement, and against Inspector Robertson, of the Banniapooker Police Section, for aiding and abetting in the above offences, was called on Tuesday at the Joint-Magistrate's Court, when it was found that the first two defendants had not attended pursuant to that summons. The hearing of the case was postponed for a week, and a warrant issued for the arrest of the defendants who had not appearance. entered appearance. An order was passed that when arrested they should be released on bail of Rs. 30 each during the interval between their arrest and the hearing of the case.—Indian Daily News, Sept. 14.

MAJOR-GENERAL CHAMBERLAIN. - The Lucknow Times understands that Major-General Chamberlain's health will probably render it necessary that he should take short sick leave to enable him to recover lost ground, arising from an indefatigable attention to the duties of his command during an unusually trying season. We believe the gallant officer will visit Ranikhet, where he has a brother—Colonel T. C. Chamberlain—a former very popular city magistrate of Lucknow. We hope a change from the stewing plains to the invigorating climate of the Himalayas may suffice to brace the General up again. General up again. We have not heard who will command the Division during the General's absence, but that is a matter of seniority, we suppose.

A Babu's Opinion of Independence.—An official lately returned from furlough, whom I shall call Mr. A. While travelling the other day, he entered into conversation with a babu seated opposite. It transpired that the babu lived in a district not many miles from Calcutta. "Who is the judge at your station, babu, and how is he liked in court?" said Mr. A. "Sir," said the babu, "the judge, Mr. B. is the most independent man we have ever had on the bench." "What do you mean by 'independent,' babu?" replied Mr. A. "Other judges," retorted the babu with a twinkle in his eye, "generally go to sleep on the bench after tiffin, but Mr. B. invariably nods his head before tiffin; he is a very independent gentleman."—

Pioneer Correspondent.

The Cholera at Jammu.—We have been asked to state that the accounts which have appeared in our paper of the cholera at Jammu are exaggerated, but that in Sealkote also similarly exaggerated accounts of it were received; and it was in consequence of these that Dr. Cunningham was sent up there by the Punjab Government, with the consent of the Maharajah, and reached Jammu on the 29th ult. The disease had been severe doubtless about the middle fortnight of August, but latterly it had been on the decline, and while Dr. Cunningham was there five or six new cases a day were all that were reported, the great amelioration taking place strange enough on the day of his arrival. Dr. Cunningham has returned to Sialkot.—Public Opinion.

Mr. Ashley Eden.—It is a noticeable fact that while some affirm and some as stoutly deny that Mr. Ashley Eden is to be our next Lieut.-Governor, his is the name that, whether for affirmation or denial, is in every one's mouth, as if a sort of public instinct pointed him out as the coming man. It may seem to some that this fact is in itself some proof of his fitness for the office, and we frankly admit that in some of the qualities of a ruler he excels every man who has been mentioned for the post. That he is a man of excellent parts has been long a proved fact; that he is a really able administrator his work in Burmah has put beyond a doubt. That his very name would go for a good deal in Bengal is also unquestionable.—Friend of India.

Fatal Accident.—On Saturday afternoon, at two o'clock, an accident, resulting in loss of life, occurred to a European fireman of the s.s. City of Oxford, since left port, under the following circumstances:—The vessel left her moorings, and when she had drifted about twenty feet off the jetty (No. 7), where she was lying, the deceased, who had remained ashore drinking, came running to the jetty head, but finding the vessel beyond reach he jumped into a country boat lying near, with a view to overtake the vessel and go on board her, but unfortunately he jumped on the roofing and glided off into the water. One of his comrades from the vessel seeing this danger befall him almost instantaneously jumped after him, and dived twice, but to no effect. The man did not rise to the surface, and it is believed he was swept away by the current. The man who had gone to his rescue afterwards got into the same "dinghee," and went on board the steamer.—Indian Daily News, Sept. 18.

FRONTIER NEWS.—There is no improvement in the health of the Akhoond of Swat, and all hope of his recovery has been given up; he is said to be dying from the natural effects of old age. A Hindoo Kutree having been converted to Christianity in the city of Peshawur, there is much excitement among the Hindoos, who have petitioned the Deputy Commissioner on the subject. Trade has been very slack at Peshawur this season, and there has been severe loss, in consequence of which a reduction has been granted on the octroi duty leviable on certain articles of merchandise. Meer Wali, the ruler of Chitral, visited Aman-ool-Moolk, the ruler of Kashgar, on the excuse of a shooting excursion, but in reality for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation of the hereditary blood feud between them. The mission, however, failed, and a quarrel ensued. The ruler of Chitral has closed the roads in his province against the trade between Cashmere and Badakshan via Chitral, and the Aman-ool-Moolk has applied to the Ameer of Cabul for military aid against him.—Indian Public Opinion, Sept. 13.

Mr. Elliot.—The Government of India, which is always ready enough to shower distinctions on Indian civilians, usually discloses less readiness in recognising the perhaps less pretentious, but sometimes more heroic, services of regimental officers who are sent about into Perak picnics, and other pleasant affairs of that kind. We therefore notice with particular pleasure the award of one year's pay to Mr. Elliot, of her Majesty's 10th Foot, who was rather badly wounded the other day in the Malayan expedition. We wish we could take this as a sign of a general awakening, which would result in suitable rewards to all the officers who suffered in one way or another in Perak. The number of those who suffered is not very large, and the Government would not find much difficulty in picking them out. In the Buffs, for instance, Mr. Townsend came to some kind of grief, if we remember rightly, by a curious duel with some savage, the comedy in which could hardly have made his wounds any the pleasanter to bear; and a search will doubtless disclose some more names, all more or less deserving to be held in remembrance.

—Indian Daily News, Sept. 16.

SUICIDE OF MR. GREEN.—It is with sincere regret that we (Indian Public Opinion) learn of the death, by his own hand, of Mr. R. Green, Assistant Engineer, Sirhind Canal, stationed at Bul, about ten miles from Loodiana. The deceased paid a visit to a friend at the Suddur Station on Saturday last, and returned to Bul, the Sub-Divisional head-quarters, on the morning of the following day, and was dead by mid-day of the 12th. He inflicted on himself two wounds with a dagger, one in the neck and the other in the abdomen, and when discovered he had apparently bled to death. A rambling and very incoherent account that he has left of his recent mental sufferings does not afford a reasonable motive for his conduct, but renders it perfectly intelligible on the ground of in-His body was brought into Loodiana for the usual inquest and interment. Mr. Green did very good work while on special duty in Bengal last year, and it is not too much to say that overwork in a malarious climate laid the germs of a disease which sapped his health and impaired his intellect. If anything could hasten the dreadful crisis, it was the isolated life which the emergencies of his service imposed upon him.

THE CALCUTTA SEASON.-The Calcutta Season, as we lately explained, though without dealing at the time with more than the bare facts, has just had a narrow escape of being postponed out of existence altogether almost this year. If the offices had remained at Simla till after the Delhi Assemblage, the period for which they would have settled at the capital of India, prior to their return for next season in the hills, would have been about two months and a half. Of course, the natural question would have been, "Why come to Calcutta at all for so short a time?" and that question would have been difficult to answer. So difficult, that it is possible the mere prospect of having to face it may partly have explained the reluctance of the Government to entertain the idea of sparing the people who will attend the Delhi gathering the expense of the double journey. It can hardly be contended that any public purpose is served by keeping to the original programme. The Viceroy in any case will be away. The Cashmere trip and the frontier surin any case will be away. The Cashmere trip and the frontier survey will engage his time right up to Christmas, and Calcutta will see nothing of him till next year, whatever happens. So that, in truth, the Calcutta season is doomed this year, and nothing the return of the offices can do will redeem it. The members of Council even, whose presence would do something to appease Calcutta, will be unable to return to that city en musse. The Commander-in-Chief will be touring. So will also Sir Andrew Clarke. Sir William Muir does not return to the Presidency at all, but goes home at the close of the Simla season. What is there really, then, to hinder the exceptional arrangement proposed? We need not even affect to consider whether any public interests would be endangered if the work of the departments were left to flow on uninterruptedly till Christmas, instead of being broken up in the beginning of November. The period that will intervene between the recommencement of work at Calcutta after the return to the plains and the pause in honour of New Year's Day will be of but very little value. will practically do anything in that fragment of time. So then we have eliminated from the motives which can have induced the Government to retain the original programme, the interests of the public service and the claims of the Calcutta residents. The wishes of the persons concerned would notoriously have weighed in favour of remaining at Simla. Then what is the explanation of the actual decision? As we say, apparently nothing but this, to remain at Simla would raise a very delicate question. One of the most impressive speakers who ever presided over the House of Commons was once asked what would happen if he really put in force the dreadful threat he had sometimes uttered to name a member. "God only knows," was his earnest reply. Would the Government of India have nothing but this to say, if its action should prematurely lead the world to ask what good purpose at all was achieved by its winter visits to the Hooghly shore ?—Pioneer, Sept. 6.

SAVAGE ATTACK ON AN INDIGO-PLANTER.—(BHAGALPUR, Sept.)
—On Friday morning, the 1st inst., Mr. Stalkartt, manager of Singhessur Factory, visited the village of Etwah, in the sub-division of Mudehparrah. On his arrival he proceeded to business, making out the boundary of some fields, the land having been taken in farm by him from Baboo Jankee Persad. A dispute arose between Mr. Stalkartt and the Baboo's servants regarding the putting down of some pegs, and after some altercation these men made an attack upon the planter, and assisted by the village people commenced an onslaught with sticks, staves, and split bamboos. Mr. Stalkartt, placing his back against a wall, fought his assailants bravely, until, overpowered by numbers, he found he would soon be helpless; he then broke through the crowd and ran for his life, but finding his pursuers gaining ground on him he endeavoured to climb a tree, and get beyond their reach. He was, however, seized by the legs and pulled down, after which he was dragged, hustled, and beaten back to the village from which he had escaped. On nearing it he found a house had been set on fire, and upon the blaze it was proposed to place the planter. Whether they thought better of it, or whether they fancied they had gone far enough, it is impossible to say; however, they did not proceed to this extreme. They satisfied their amiable feelings by accusing Mr. Stalkartt of setting fire to the burning house instead, and by keeping him a prisoner in the hot midday sun without a hat; and as the heat has for some days been unparallelled, this could only have been at the risk of his life. At this juncture a friend having heard of the row came on the scene from Singhessur, and earnestly begged he might be allowed to take Mr. Stalkartt, who was by this time very much exhausted, away. Liberty was not allowed him, however, to do so, and threats were used of serving the newcomer in the same way. What would have been the end of the business it is hard to say, but just then, to the great surprise of all, the village was found to be surrounded by police; for once those much maligned individuals were found to be where they were wanted. To account for this, I must mention that a syce of Mr. Stalkartt's having run away from the fight did the wisest thing he could do under the circumstances; he went as fast as a pony could carry him to Mudehparrah, and gave information to the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. W. B. Martin, in a shorter time than it takes to write it. Mr. Martin was gallopping through the burning midday sun, a ride of nine miles, toward the scene of the assault, picking up police chowkeydars and factory peons as he went. Mr. Martin reached Etwah before the natives had an idea that it was possible even for the news to have reached their station. The village was suprognaled the Baboa who is suptheir station. The village was surrounded, the Baboo who is supposed to have instigated the attack, and the amiable people who The village was surrounded, the Baboo who is supcarried it out, found themselves caught in a net from which it is to be hoped they will not escape without heavy punishment. Mr. Stalkartt received a great number of blows, but has no bones broken. Had speedy help not arrived, however, it is quite possible worse might have befallen him .- Indian Daily News Correspondent.

THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AT SERINGAPATAM.

On the morning of the 4th September the Governor, the Commander-in-Chief, and staff, with the officers in the station, left Mysor in two carriages and a char-a-banc for the purpose of exploring Seringapatam. The party proceeded without halting till they reached a turn in the road from which the western side of the fortress and the northwest bastion is visible. At this place they descended from the carriages, and walked along the river bank to a point opposite the breach. A little lower down two guns have been placed on the ground to represent the advanced parallels from which General Baird issued to returned to the main road, crossed the river over the Periapatam, or aqueduct bridge, and entered the fort under a decorated pandal, on which "God save his Grace the Governor" was emblazoned. On reaching the north-west angle they alighted; and then ascended the ramparts to examine the site of the breach through which the British troops entered on the memorable 4th of May, 1799. According to the narrative of the siege by Lieutenant-Colonel Beatson, Surgeon-General to the Army in the Field, this breach was 100 feet wide, and situate in the curtain, sixty yards to the right of the bastion, as viewed from the opposite bank of the river. The breach was built up after the occupation of the fort by the English, and the difference between the old and new work is quite distinct. Some of the lower courses, however, bear the marks of cannon balls, a proof that part of the old wall is still standing. The fausse braye opposite this site was shaken, and probably its condition has remained unaltered, barring that the dismantled stones appear to have been used in the construction of the new wall.

Colonel Beatson, in page 131 of his Narrative, states "the breach was wide, and the ascent easy, and when upon it, unless at the very summit, the troops could not be seen from the west cavalier, as the defences to the right and left had been silenced by the batteries; the breach was, in fact, a place of safety, the danger was in getting to it." Sir Neville Chamberlain, after carefully examining the ground, expressed his belief in the accuracy of Beatson's plans and description. Colonel Malleson, in his recent monograph of Seringapatam, affirms that "the breach through which General Harris's troops effected an entrance is preserved unrepaired a monument of British prowess," and he indulges in a panegyric under the delusion that the troops scaled the ramparts as they now exist. Beatson states that it Beatson states that it was "deemed expedient to make a show of breaching the shoulder of the north-west angle bastion, and to conceal the intended breach until the guns were in position to bear upon that point," and the result was that "the maindrampet and the fausse brayes were considerably shattered," and so they remain to this day. All honour to the British troops who stormed and took Seringapatam under an eastern sun, and in spite of great difficulties, and one cannot wonder at Colonel Malleson's feelings of admiration when he stood on the top of the bastion at the north-west angle and pictured to himself the gallant soldiers charging across the broad rocky bed of the river, and climbing the ramparts with the agility of that race from which Darwin assures us we are descended. The next object of interest visited was D'Haviland's arch, and his Grace admired the skill and care with which it had been constructed. After examining the water gate, and the spot at which Tippu Sultan was believed to have been killed, the party visited the Mosque. His Grace the Com-mander-in-Chief and a few of the most adventurous members ascended to the top of the minarets, from whence they obtained an extensive view. They then proceeded to the Daria Daulat, and after admiring the wonderful paintings, sat down to an excellent repast provided by Captain Wilson on behalf of the Maharajah. At 4 P.M. another collation was spread, and after all had done justice to the good fare, the party visited the tombs of Haidar Ali and Tippu Sultan, some of the monuments erected in memory of the British officers and men who fell during the siege, and the cemetery raised when troops were stationed at Seringapatam. His Grace expressed much satisfaction at the manner in which the monuments and tombs were preserved

Miscellancous.

THE MANDALAY RESIDENTSHIP .- Colonel Duncan, Resident at Mandalay, is expected shortly to resign that appointment, and a Rangoon paper says that a Bengal civilian is to succeed him.

THE BHAMO ROUTE.—The Rangoon Times states that an English gentleman in Mandalay has offered his services to Government to thoroughly re-open the Bhamo route to Yunan. In face of rumoured disturbances at Momein, we do not see how this is practicable.

A WOMAN BITTEN BY A CROCODILE.—An aged Polaya woman at Covalam, while trying to catch fishes in a paddy field, was seriously bitten by a crocodile. Her cheeks were so violently attacked that bitten by a crocodile. the flesh between the jaws and the eyes was torn away. - Western Star.

FAMINE IN BELLARY.—A letter from Bellary says :—" Famine is very close on our heels. Prices of food are rapidly rising. No rain has fallen. Relief works have been started in various parts of the districts, and looting the bazaars is probable. The authorities are prepared for the worst."—Madras Mail, Sept. 16.

SIR WILLIAM ROBINSON.—Sir William Robinson, after tearing himself away from Ostacamund at the end of this month, will proceed on a tour to visit all the pagodas of the Presidency, with the object of inquiring into their financial condition. We trust this does not imply that the Government are thinking of repairing the Imperial deficit by any arbitrary meddling with the revenues of pagodas.—Madras Med, Sept. 18.

A DARING BAND OF ROBBERS.—Not long ago a daring band entered the Palace of the Zamorin of Calicut and pillaged the treasury of all the valuables it contained. Gold and silver coin, gold and silver in bulk, everything fell a prey to the bold intruders; and it is said that over a lakh of rupees worth of property has been robbed. Some of the Zamorin's household are suspected, and their trial in company with others concerned will shortly take place.

Major-General Daly.—It is reported that Major-General Daly will shortly retire from the Political Department on account of failing health. The gallant officer is the representative of the Viceroy in the Central India administration. He is Political Agent at the Courts of Scindiah and Holkar, and as the best relations always existed between him and those administrations, Generaly Daly's departure will be greatly regretted.—Madras Standard.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT OF MADRAS.—Under the present Municipal Act of Madras, professional tax is not payable by an official on any income in excess of Rs. 3,000 a month, so the Governor who draws Rs. 10,666, the Councillors who draw Rs. 5,333, the Chief Secretary who draws Rs. 4,166, and the Revenue Secretary who draws Rs. 3,333, all pay the same professional tax of Rs. 150 per mensem. This is a pleasant arrangement for the highest paid officials, and points to their ability to take care of Number One.—Medicas Meil.

Another Goldfield.—Another Gold Prospecting Scheme has been started in Wynad, called "The Prince of Wales." The field lies adjacent to the unhappy "Alpha." The "lift" has been leased from the Nellembore Rajah, who is to have a share in the profits. are twenty shareholders, each of whom has paid a donation of forty rupees. The eight hundred rupees thus collected have been spent on the erection of a suitable bungalow for the superintendent, whose monthly salary of a hundred rupees will be met by the monthly subscriptions of the shareholders.

The Governor of Madras.—Yesterday morning, at 9 a.m., the Ladies Grenville and Lady Gore Langton, together with General Stewart, Adjutant-General, left Bangalor by special train for Ootacamund. They were accompanied to the railway station by Mr. Saunders, the Chief Commissioner, and by General and Mrs. Elmhirst. The train stopped at Malloor to take up his Grace the Duke of Buckingham, and H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, who drove across in the morning from Oosoor, a distance of some seven-and-twenty miles.—Madras Mad, Sept. 13.

CHOLERA IN TANJORE.—Our correspondent at Tanjore, writing on the 17th instant, says:—"This dreadful disease is spreading; it has appeared in Triviar, the resort of pilgrims from all parts of the Presidency, and from whence it is likely to spread. Yesterday a fatal case was reported in the Fort of Tanjore. Altogether things do not look wall. The want of drinking water is much felt in many do not look well. The want of drinking water is much felt in many places. We have had rain here and there, but a general downpour is needed. Something should be done to preserve the little drinkable water we have. It is lamentable to see people taking oil baths in our scanty tanks."—Madras Times, Sept. 19.

A NEW STEAMBOAT SERVICE.—Negotiations are in progress between the Italian Government and Messrs. Rubattino and Company, the agents of the Italian steamers at present running between Bombay and Marseilles, for an extended service to India. It is proposed that the number of steamers shall be increased—that instead of one vessel a month running each way, the Company shall run two or three according to the demand of traffic and other circumstances. They are to run also to Calcutta and Madras alternately, as well as to Bombay, and it is proposed to give the Company a subsidy for the conveyance of the Italian mails.

MINING IN MADRAS.—The following is an extract from a letter to a resident in Madras, from a firm of mining engineers in London:

-" 30th July.-We must now ask you to help us in India, as we are about sending out men to prospect the Madras Presidency with a view of establishing mining on a large scale, if the country prove sufficiently rich to warrant our doing so. We have heard from gentlemen now in London that land can be procured from native land-holders by paying a small royalty, or they would gladly accept a few hundred pounds for a large area of metallic-bearing land. We propose starting our men by the second steamer of October, and may we ask you to engage six men of Indian experience for us? We do not expect to find professionals in India, but men who know the habits and religious prejudices of the natives, and who can assist our men in settling for the land, &c. You can arrange their salaries from £20 to £50 per mensem, but not for any fixed term. We mean to form our men in six parties, having two of our and one of the men you engage in each party."—Madras Mail.

THE COORG PLANTERS AND THE GOVERNOR.—The dinner given by the Coorg Planters' Association at the club to the Madras Governor and the Commander-in-Chief has proved a great success. After the toast "The Empress," given by the President, the Rev. A. Fennell, the Duke's health was proposed and drank with enthusiasm. His Grace in reply spoke as follows:-" I respond with much pleasure to the toast you have so kindly proposed, and drank to my health. I have come here with a particular object at this time of the year in spite of all the obstacles which seemed to stand in my way. told Mercara was buried in clouds and rain, and was almost inaccessible and uninhabitable during the mousoon; but I find that the dwellers of this cloudland are after all not much the worse for the discomforts the season brings with it. I confess that since my arrival I have learnt to imbibe a great deal of moisture, I sometimes felt, as if under the saturating mists of the Horseshoe Fall of the Great Niagara! but I am not sorry for it; after my return to the hot country I shall get thoroughly dry again. Gentlemen, it gives me great pleasure to meet such a large body of Englishmen around a social table that has quite the look of home. As in other parts of the world in her Majesty's dominions, I see here the representatives of British enterprise, industry, and civilisation, and I wish you every success. Some of you have invested your capital in a healthy and legitimate occupation; others attempt to make their way up in the world by their own exertions; to all and each I would say, prosper and be prospering! Feeling still as a stranger in the land which has been committed to my gubernatorial charge, I am anxious to make myself acquainted with every part of the Presidency, to study the characteristics of the people, their institutions, the land, the soil and its productions, that I may obtain correct views on those questions which may come before me for my decision. I am most favourably impressed with the aspect of this little province—as far as the clouds have permitted me to see it—and its inhabitants. am particularly pleased that so large a share of the revenue of the country is derived from native industry. Settlers in the land as you are, your success is greatly dependent on your kindly feeling towards, and good understanding with the natives. I have already observed such indications of material and intellectual progress amongst them, that in time to come the natives may place themselves on a footing not much inferior to your own. Gentlemen, I should like to see a little more of this interesting country, and if health and circumstances permit that I hold my allotted term as Governor of Madras, I shall seize an early opportunity of coming again; and I hope I shall then see again all the gentlemen here present, and many more!—I drink to the prosperity of the Coorg Planters' Association."

STATION TALK.

On the Banks of the Narbala, Sept. 8.—I went for some distance this morning so as to see Jehanghier, one of the two men who so marvellously escaped, and I took down his words almost as he spoke them. At two o'clock on Wednesday morning it was noticed that between the rails on the bridge proper and the abutment there was a gap of nearly four inches, the bolts being broken under pressure from the bridge. Soon after daylight Jehanghier, who is the permanent-way inspector, went with ten men behind him to examine the bridge from end to end. The water was seen rushing four feet below the "tops." He tried to replace the strained rails by others, but failed, and came back. He then received a message from Mr. Middleton to meet him in the middle, and for the first time he noticed that the rails seemed swaying half an inch or so to and fro. He then came back to the northern abutment, which looked firm and did not shake. It was now about nine o'clock, and with Pestonjee Framjee Green, inspector of iron bridges, and Rozario, the shunting master, he walked out a few spans' distance, when Pestonjee said it was not safe, but Rozario urged him to go to the end, and to the end they went, examining everything carefully. They had returned to within two spans of the Unclesur abutment when they heard a sharp crack, like a pistol shot. The bridge had given way, but heeled deliberately down. The three men disappeared. Jehanghier says he went right to the bottom, and rising saw a sleeper, which he thrust between his legs like a horse, He was whirling now down with the current among the debris, and another sleeper struck him on the side. This he laid hold of and thrust sleeper struck him on the side. This he laid hold of and thrust under one arm, and in a short time he succeeded in seizing another. Then, says he, "I took my head up and called boatwalla, boatwalla, for half a mile," when quite unexpectedly his logs and his luck actually took him among the boats some three miles down on the Broach side, and the boatmen picked him out of the water, and as soon as he could listen they told him another "saheb saved, saved." This turned out to be Rozario, who had come down upon a plank. Pestonjee, on rising from the water, had clutched instinctively at his throat. Rozario struck him off, and so he was supposed to have disapppeared, and for the last two days dozens of boats have been searching for his body. Jehanghier finished his story with an eloquent "God saved me." For many hours after his rescue he was so full of emotion that he could give no other version but these three words. Pestonjee, who was supno other version but these three words. Lesionjee, who was supposed to have been drowned, was a wonderful favourite among his superiors and colleagues. The station-master at Unclesur told me "he was my friend, above him no man. I saw the three standing, then their legs stretched wide out over the crack. Now they are gone, and he is dead." It is an odd fact that the two men saved gone, and he is dead." It is an odd fact that the two men saved the control of the contro were unable to swim, and that Pestonjee could.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE THAKUR OF RAJKOT.—Government orders have been passed investing Thakur Sahib, Bawaji Raj of Rajkot with uncontrolled second class jurisdiction, consequent upon the favourable report by Mr. Peile and Captain Salmon. This news, which was anticipated, was received on Sept. 14 by the public with much pleasure.—Times of India Correspondent.

CHIEF SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT .- F.S. Chapman, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, who proceeded on leave of absence to England, returned by the last mail, and arrived here on the evening of Tuesday last. Mr. Chapman is at present residing with Mr. C. Gonne, the Secretary to Government in the Political Department, and received charge of his office from Mr. Ravenscroft yesterday, the latter officer being appointed to act as Collector of Bombay.—Poona Observer, Sept. 16.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT HOBART.—The unexpected death of Lieutenant Hobart, Adjutant of her Majesty's 66th Regiment, at Poona, has deprived the service of a most valuable officer. He was devoted to his profession, and the splendid drill and smart appearance of the 66th are in no small degree owing to his zeal and unwearied efforts. His brother officers, among whom he was universally popular, much regret him, and his death has greatly shocked those who saw him but a short time ago, in the full vigour of health and strength. Dysentery carried him off, after a brief illness.— Times of India, Sept. 22.

THE SOLDIERS' INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1876.—This most important annual Exhibition was formally opened yesterday evening by his Excellency Sir Charles Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley Branch Staveley, who arrived at the Assembly Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Staveley Branch Br bly Rooms precisely at half-past four o'clock. His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse arrived a little later, and the whole affair was not only picturesque, but grand and imposing. The exhibition consisted of various articles of various descriptions, and bore evidence of the great industry and ingenuity of the British and native soldiers, and the Military Department was well represented .- Poonah Observer, Sept. 16.

FIRE ON BOARD A COAL SHIP.—The British ship Galloway, Captain J. McKinlay, which arrived in harbour on the evening of the 18th inst., from Leith, with coals, was on fire. It appears that the coal was on fire before her arrival in harbour, and the captain had been trying to extinguish it. Mr. Jolley, the harbourmaster, on the receipt of information, went off and remained the whole night on board. The harbour steam fire-engines were used. The cargo was discharged as soon as possible. Captain Searle, the master attendant, went on board yesterday morning and inspected the working of the pumps and discharging cargo. During the voyage the Galloway experienced strong gales off the Cape of Good Hope, but for the rest of the passage the weather was moderate. She lost two seamen in the Pentland Firth, and one jib and stay gear attached to it, and had to cut the captain's boat adrift.—Times of India, Sept. 22.

An Over-heated Ice-house.—A correspondent tells us that there has been a good deal of warm work in Bombay between Messrs. Tudor and Co. and thirsty citizens baulked of their customary ice supply. But what if we state that the ice-house itself, a low masonry dome-roofed building, has been within an ace of catching fire? This is a pretty state of things, and is all traceable in the first instance to the late agent of the company, who, until his accounts were inspected two or three months ago, was living quite splendidly by contrast with the melancholy Bombry of the present time. This gentleman failed to look after the fittings and packings inside the ice-house, where a considerable quantity of sawdust is packed to protect the ice from outer heat. When the stock began to run so unaccountably low, the inspectors acting on behalf of the company took a good look into and about the usually frigid warehouse, but found it surprisingly warm. On a thermometer being applied, it ran up to 98°, being 15° more than the outer air. No wonder the ice was vanishing away; a few degrees more, the few wooden fittings in the place would have succumbed to spontaneous combustion, and the fire engines would have been called out in all serious-ness for the practical joke of drenching a burning ice-house. We leave it to chemists and other natural philosophers to set forth the rationale of the process; but we suppose the sawdust has either been of the wrong kind or been left in too long, so that it fermented, and was rapidly generating dangerous heat, as the thermometer proved. It must be confessed they are funny folk at Bombay. It is not imdossible that after this achievement they may set their harbour on fire next .- Pioneer.

Ceylon.

A Good Story.-It is related that the new Bishop of Ceylon, when sighting some rocks off the coast, inquired if there was any danger. "My Lord," said the pious captain, "if we were driven on that reef we should be all in heaven in a few minutes." "Oh!" said the Bishop, "God forbid."

PUBLIC WORKS.—Nearly the whole of the estimate having been spent on the new Kaltura Bridge long before the work is finished, three gentlemen it is said have been despatched post-haste to inquire into the expenditure—not before it was time, that is clear. This is very Cingalese. One does not feel particular astonishment at the strange conduct of our "boys" or appoos when,—having carefully watched the gradual diminution of one's stock of beer without caring to throw master a hint that the last bottle was finished yesterday—they suddenly proclaim the startling fact at dinner in the evening, when too late to remedy it-"Beer all done, Saar" !-"for 'tis their nature to." But it does cause one to stare a little to find the well-paid Government "boys" playing the public the same trick. The ways of the P. W. D. were, however, always very funny. The only redeeming feature about this Department is the easy cheerfulness with which it makes "ducks and drakes" of our money, whilst it never annoys us with useless apology.—Ceylon Times, Sept. 5.

THE AUDIT OFFICE.—Mr. A. Young Adams, the Director of Public Instruction, has been appointed Acting Auditor-General. Mr. Adams's services date from 1858, and he has had a very varied experience in different branches of the service. It is satisfactory to learn that the Governor has avoided any resort to objectionable pluralities in providing for the carrying on of the Audit-office work. By the appointment of Mr. Adams the Government have secured the services of a civilian who dates from 1858, who has had a very varied experience in different branches of the service, and who is, moreover, on the spot, and therefore able to take up the temporary duties without any inconvenience.—A rumour has been put in circulation to the effect that the reason why Sir Charles Layard refused the acting appointment of Auditor-General was that he intended shortly to retire from the Service. We (Ceylon Times) have good reason for believing that nothing is at present more remote from the intention of the veteran Government Agent of the Western Province than retirement from public life. Sir Charles is in the full enjoyment of physical health, far more so, indeed, than very many of his juniors.

PROSPERITY OF THE ISLAND.—The last Session of the Legislature was opened on the 13th Sept., when Sir William Gregory was able to point with the utmost satisfaction to the continued prosperity of the island, and the flourishing condition of the colonial revenues. The income for the current year is expected to be 14,200,000 rupees, as compared with 14,100,000 rupees last year, when the balance in hand beyond expenditure was 1,341,563 rupees, a result which few, if any, colonies can show. When Sir Hercules Robinson assumed the government of Ceylon he found its income 9,784,923 rupees, and he left it at 11,216,790, showing an increase of 1,431,867 rupees. During the present administration the increase in revenue has been During the present administration the increase in revenue has been 3,200,000 rupees. The present Session will be unusually heavy, owing to an accumulation of legislative enactments requiring attention. The Governor contemplates resigning his appointment in March next. The ecclesiastical differences in the island have subsided, for the time, at any rate, pending formal reference to the Metropolitan of India. The coffee crop of the current season, now nearly closing, will scarcely reach 750,000 cwt., being one-third below what was at one time expected. The growing crop for the season 1876-77 promises better things, and is expected to reach 900,000 cwt., or between that quantity and the even million. The works for the breakwater are advancing rapidly, and within a month block laying will commence in good earnest.

NEW BISHOPRICS.-Two new missionary bishoprics are to be established in India, and two clergymen, who have already been nominated, will be consecrated as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. They are the Rev. Dr. R. Caldwell and the Rev. Edward Sargent, M.A.

Tambracherry Coffee Estates Company.—The annual report of the Tambracherry Coffee Estates Company (Limited) mentions that the actual net cost of the estates has been under £70,000. The crop of 1875-76, although not fully realising estimates, was sold for £23,077, while the expenses, £17,551, included large sums for manuring and other improvements, the benefit of which will not accrue till next year. Out of the profit balance of £5,911 a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. is announced, absorbing £4,000, and £1,000 is placed to reserve, carrying forward £911. According to the accounts a portion of the profit balance is due to the item "gain in exchange, £2,165."

BILLS ON INDIA.—On Wednesday when the tenders for India Council drafts to the amount of 35,00,000 rupees (say £350,000), were opened at the Bank of England, it was found that there was a trifle more inquiry for these means of remittance to the East. The amounts allotted were-to Calcutta, £199,400; to Bombay, £150,000; and allotted were—to Calcutta, £199,400; to Bombay, £100,000; and to Madras, £600; and tenders for bills on all presidencies at 1s. 8d. received about 31 per cent., and those for telegraphic transfers nothing. Last week, however, at 1s. 8d. the bills were for the most part allotted in full, and telegraphic transfers on Calcutta and Madras received about 32 per cent. The effect on the silver market to-day was trifling, and transactions took place in the afternoon at 52d. per oz.

THE PROGRESS AND CONDITION OF INDIA.—A Parliamentary paper under this title has been issued, containing exhaustive reports respecting the moral and material progress and condition of India during the year 1874-5. Full particulars are given of administration and legislation, justice, and police, finance, land administration, agriculture, trade, manufactures, public health, and sanitation, emigration, education, and foreign relations. Under the head of "Justice and Police" we are told that in Bengal there was a decrease of offences against the person only, but an increase in those of a serious character. In Madras, Bombay, and the Punjab crime had decreased. The revenue and expenditure returns show that the net revenue of the opium department in Bengal was £3,264,530, against £3,584,766 in 1873-4. Reference is made to the depreciation of silver, the imports of which exceeded those of last year by upwards of a million sterling.

DEATH OF THE MARQUIS OF TWEEDDALE.—We have to announce the death of this nobleman, which took place on Tuesday morning, at his residence, Yester House, Haddingtonshire. The deceased peer, who was in his ninetieth year, had been ill for some time, and recently he was severely burned by falling into the fire in his dressing-room at Oxenford Castle. He was the eighth marquis in the peerage of Scotland and a representative peer for Scotland, having, as the result of a long military career, attained the distinc-tions of Field-Marshal, Knight of the Thistle, and the Grand Cross of the Bath. He was born in 1787, and entered the army in 1804. Under the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula he served as Under the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula he served as assistant quarternaster-general, and received the gold medal for the battle of Vittoria, in which action, as well as at Busaco, he was wounded. In 1825 he became colonel, major-general in 1837, lieutenant general in 1846, general in 1854, and field-marshal last year, holding the colonelcy of the 2nd Life Guards from 1862 to the time of his death. The Marquis was Lord-Lieutenant of Haddingtonshire, Lieutenant-General of the Queen's Body-guard of Scotland, and Hereditary Chamberlain of Dumfriesshire, was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Madras from 1842 to 1848. His lordship married in 1816 Lady Susan Montagn, third daughter His lordship married in 1816 Lady Susan Montagu, third daughter of the Duke of Manchester, and who died six years ago. The peerage is now succeeded to by his lordship's son, Viscount Walden, who has seen considerable military service, having entered the Grenadier Guards in 1841, and served in the Sutlej and Crimean campaigns, before his retirement from the army in 1866. The new peer is President of the Royal Zoological Society, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and deputy-lieutenant of Haddingtonshire.

Delhi and London Bank (Limited).—The half-yearly ordinary general meeting of the above-named company was held yesterday, at the bank office, King William-street. Mr. D. H. Small was in the chair. The report was taken as read. The Chairman said that this being the interim half-yearly meeting, he had only a few brief remarks to offer on the working of the bank for the past half-year. He wished that a better report of the profits had been laid before them, and that a dividend similar to that of the previous half-year could have been declared, but the directors had had unprecedented difficulties to deal with through so large an amount having been transmitted to India directly before the unprecedented fall took place in value, and which sums had to be returned to this country. The profits of the Indian branches were, from a like cause, very much diminished. The depression in the value of Indian securities had also diminished the amount available for a dividend, a portion of their funds having been invested in them. These circumstances were the more to be regretted, because other departments of the bank's business had yielded satisfactory and profitable returns. With respect to the bank's claims upon the Government of India in connection with the Cawnpore Bridge, he regretted to say, notwithstanding the re-peated efforts of the directors to obtain from the Indian Government a reconsideration of their clains, and the award of more liberal compensation than that already offered, that up to the present time they had been unsuccessful, though they were still pressing their claim upon the Government, and he trusted to be able, on a future occasion, to report a favourable result. He would express a hope that the present might prove an exceptional case, and that the next time they met the directors might not only be able to declare a better dividend, but that they would also be able to lay up, according to the usual practice, something towards the lock-up account. He begged to move that the report and accounts be received and adopted, and that a dividend at the rate of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, be declared. Colonel I. T. Smith, R.E., seconded the motion. He believed that if the Government of India would take the necessary steps they might improve the condition of the exchanges very shortly, but he very much feared, from all he heard, that there was so much want of knowledge on the subject, and they were so much bewildered, that they would prefer the laisse faire system of doing nothing. The resolution was passed unanimously. General Grey, in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, commended the directors for having been able to pay even this reduced dividend. He was engaged in other ventures of a similar character, in which he had not received the same amount of success. The vote was seconded by Colonel Ouseley, and carried unanimously.

ACCIDENTS AT MILITARY WORKS. - An accidental explosion, resulting in the loss of five lives, having recently occurred while filling the shells of a field battery in the Bombay Presidency, the Commander-in-Chief in India has directed that the following regulations for the performance of laboratory duties, issued by the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, he considered ratory ditties, assued by the Commander-in-Chief of Bomosy, he considered applicable to the whole of the field artillery in India, for future observance:

—"No laboratory work of any description is to be carried out in the gun shed; either a space in the open ground, at a safe distance from the gun shed, should be selected or a tent pitched for the purpose, if deemed necessary. An officer of the battery is to be present at all such operations. The men so employed are to have nothing combustible about them or wear spurs or iron heeled boots, or anything of a metallic nature from which danger might possibly arise. The floor on which the work is carried on is to be covered with a tarpaulin or cloth of some nature. In filling shells only one is to be filled at a time; the wad should be inserted and the plug screwed down before another shell is filled.

Summary and Rebielv.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, are-from Bombay, October 2; Agra, Allahabad, and Madras, September 30; Calcutta, September 29. The monsoon being over, this mail brings news ten days later than the last.

THE news however brought by this mail is neither important nor plentiful. The Viceroy's departure from Simla was notified for the 10th October, but later telegrams show that it was postponed till Monday last. On the 10th September his Lordship opened the Fine Art Show at Simla in a playful speech, beginning with a reference to the witches in Macbeth, which was followed up by an apt anecdote about Lamartine, a pl was followed up by an apt anecdote about Lamartine, a pisant joke on the "venerable goddess Themis," and a good deal of word-playing suggested by the depreciation of the rupee and the name of Sir R. Temple, one of whose paintings represented an old Hindu temple in Nepal. "That temple represents the art of the past; but the skill with which the sketch of it is painted assures us of the existence of another Temple specially belonging to the present; and I think I may also say that the productions of the painter's son are proofs that, in point of art, the Temple of the future will rival even the Temple of the present, and continue to command our admiration." Colonel Baigrie, to whom also Lord Lytton paid a hearty tribute, won the prize for the best water-colour on an Indian subject, and Colonel Colley for the best series of water-colour sketches. Other prizes were won by Major Tanner, Mrs. Gillespie, Miss West and Mrs. Whymper.

In a long Resolution of September 22 the Indian Government, with special reference to letters received from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and the Calcutta Trades Association, delivers its own opinion about the silver question in these

That the divergence of values of gold and silver is not necessarily only attributable to the diminution in the value of silver; strong reasons induce the belief that gold may have increased and silver decreased in value. That although it is most desirable that the standard of value in India should be the same as that in the chief countries with which India interchanges commodities, yet her trade will not be permanently injured by a fall in the value of the rupee measured in gold, provided a fresh and stable equilibrium of the precious metals be obtained. That up to the present time no sufficient ground exists for interfering with the standard of value. By the resolution of July 31 the Government has standard or value. By the resolution of July 31 the Government has taken other steps to bring the revenue and expenditure of the current year into equilibrium. Meanwhile, it is important that Government should continue to use the resources at its disposal for developing Indian trade and productions. It does not therefore intend to discontinue borrowing for the construction of public works of a thoroughly established remunerative character, as much money as can be judiciously expended, provided money can be raised in the country itself on advantageous terms. There are grave objections that any present increase of the liabilities of India be fixed in gold. The suggestion of the Calcutta Trades' Association to purchase stores for Government in India is receiving attention by Government, both in England and India. But whatever the conditions of exchanges, various other circumstances must be considered in determining this question. Credit will not be taken for any borrowed money, as if it were revenue, nor will any excess amount borrowed by the Secretary of State be treated as revenue or set against ordinary expenditure of the year.

AMONG the latest victims to the cholera epidemic in Kashmir was Surgeon-Major A. Clapp, M.D., who entered H.M.'s service in 1865, and was present throughout the Abyssinian campaign. According to a correspondent of the Times of India Dr. Clapp was attacked by the scourge at Aliabad Serai. Three officers knew he was ill of cholera; they wrote a note for medical aid to Srinagar; but left him to die alone and uncared for. Other officers came to the Serai and attended upon him, but he died before the needful help from Srinagar came. It is not a pleasant story, as thus told, but it may admit of more than one expla-

THE Mohammedans of Bombay demonstrated in favour of Turkey at a meeting held on September 24. It was agreed to forward a petition to the Queen in behalf of the old English policy on that point. Money is to be subscribed on behalf of the Turkish wounded, and certain large sums—says the Bombay Gazette-" are reported to be forthcoming, but these promises have yet, we believe, to be fulfilled. There is a strong suspicion that the 'movement' is not genuine, and is due to one or two educated Mohammedans who astutely see in the present crisis an opportunity of investing the community to which they belong with great political importance."

A DEMONSTRATION on the opposite side was made the same Sunday by the Bishop of Bombay, in a sermon full of ardent if ather onesided sympathy with the sufferers from Turkish

THE remonstrance of the High Court of the North-West Provinces in the Fuller case is said to have been under consideration at head-quarters. It was understood however that the Supreme Government would not undertake the settlement of the constitutional questions raised by the High Court, but would forward the whole controversy to the India-office for its august arbitrament.

AT the meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council on Thursday, the 21st September, there was a dissussion of nearly four hours on the report of the Committee on the Civil Procedure Bill, which was adjourned. Mr. Bayley presented the report of the Committee on the Stage Carriages Bill, and the Council adjourned to the 4th of October.

ONE of the difficulties which beset a native convert to Christianity occurred lately at Mangalor. A Sudra became a convert to Christianity, but his wife and three children would not join him. He was advised by the missionaries to apply to the District Court for the charge of his children. This he accordingly did. The Act IX. of 1861, under which the claim was made, gives the District Court the power of making "such order as it shall think fit in respect to the custody or guardianship" of a minor or minors. The mother when brought before the Court refused to give over the children to the husband, who, she said, was considered to be civilly dead under Hindu law. She prayed that the Court would not disturb her possession of the children, who, she intended, should live and die Hindus. She urged that if her children went to the father they would lose their religion and their caste. The Court, though it expressed an opinion that the mother's case was very hard, held that the father, though a convert, was better entitled to the custody of the eldest son than the mother.

THE Times Correspondent telegraphed on Sunday, the 15th, that owing to the prevalence of cholera in Kashmir the programme of the Viceroy's tour has been altered and his departure from Simla deferred. He was to start for Lahor on the 14th, instead of the 10th, as originally arranged, and will omit Kashmir, but will carry out his visit to the Punjab and the Sind frontier. It is added that the Amir of Kabul and the Nepal Princes are expected at the Delhi Assemblage. The Pioneer says that the Central Indian Chiefs approve emphatically of the ceremonial, and declare it should have been held before. Holkar is prepared to spend a lakh of rupees on the occasion. Twelve or thirteen Central Indian Chiefs will attend, including Sindia, Holkar, the Begam of Bhopal, the Maharajah of Rewah, the Rajahs of Dhar, Dewas, Urcha, and Ratlam. A body of the Gaikwar's troops, with the famous gold and silver guns, has already started on a two months' march from Baroda to Delhi. The difficulty about precedence has been settled by a plan for arranging the Chiefs according to the number of guns allowed in their salutes. It is stated that there is a great demand for houses in Delhi and enormous reuts are offered.

THE following items are derived from the same source:

The Kohat Pass tribes are still troublesome. In a recent raid they killed a native trooper near Fort Mackeson. It is reported that the Government proposes a military occupation of the Bolan Pass and Khelat.

Our treaty with Khelat allows us to occupy the country when necessary, but it is hardly likely that anything of the kind is now contemplated.

Abdul Gaffor Beg Dewanbegi, formerly Khan of Khokan, whom the Russians dispossessed, has arrived at Lahor, en route for Mecca, on a pilgrimage. He has left his son behind at the head of a large body of Kirghiz to continue the war. He says that when he returns he will fight Russia to the death.

Sir William Muir leaves India about the end of the month. It is believed that Sir John Strachey will succeed him, and that Sir George Couper and Mr. Inglis will be confirmed in the respective appointments of Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces and Chief Commissioner of

The following changes are expected early next year: -Sir Henry Davies, Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, retires, and Sir Lewis Pelly probably succeeds him; Sir Henry Norman is to be appointed member of the Secretary of State's Council, and Sir Edwin Johnson will become Military Member of the Supreme Council.

Holkar opened the Narbada Railway bridge on the 5th, thus completing an important link in the communication between Central India and the Railway system. General Daly, the British Agent for Central India, and a large company were present. The Viceroy sent a telegram of congratulation.

Owing to a failure of the crops there is some distress in the Dakhan and ne Southern Maratha country. The Government has opened relief works. the Southern Maratha country. The Government has opened relief works. Scarcity is also expected in Khandesh and Nasik. Eisewhere the crops are reported on favourably.

Mr. Woodrow, Director of Public Instruction for Bengal, died last week at Darjiling of heart disease.

The Suez Canal steamer, Cawdor Castle, bound from Calcutta for Cey lon, with a cargo of rice, was lost near the mouth of the Hughli on the 7th current. The vessel grounded on a sand bank off Kedjeree and rolled over. Three Europeans and five Chinese were drowned, the rest of the crew were saved in boats. It is supposed the pilot in charge was to

ACCORDING to a Times telegram the inquest on one of the victims of the torpedo explosion in the river at Calcutta was held on Thursday, October 12, and a verdict was returned that the deceased met his death by the explosion of gunpowder, but the cause of the explosion is unknown. The evidence threw little light on the occurrence, and the jury refused to express any opinion as to the person who was to blame. Major Eckford, President of the Torpedo Committee, was examined, and repudiated all responsibility. He said the Committee had nothing to do with the blowing up of the wreck. The operations were under the direction of the Port Commissioners. The Committee merely lent a torpedo boat and the services of Sergeant Harrison, who had gone through a course of torpedo instruction at Chatham. Major Eckford added that he could not spare commissioned officers, but he had warned the Commissioners to have a competent engineer to superintend the operations. The public is far from satisfied with the result of the inquest, and it is generally felt that an official inquiry should be held and the whole affair thoroughly sifted.

A Mohammedan meeting to express sympathy with Turkey was held in the Town-hall of Calcutta on the 7th. The attendance was not large, and the leading Mohammedans were absent. The Chairman, Abdul Latif Khan, a member of the Bengal Council, made a long speech, in which he dwelt on the alliance between England and Turkey, and asserted that the accounts of the Bulgarian atrocities were exaggerated. He, however, denounced the suggestion of the Madras Mohammedan papers inviting subscriptions for a Holy War as misleading and mischievous. Several resolutions were carried expressing sympathy with the Sultan and gratitude to the British Government for supporting Turkey and also horror at the atrocities committed by the Circassians and Bashi-Bazuks. It was resolved that the present war is an ordinary civil war between the Porte and its rebellious subjects, and not a Holy War between Mohammedans and Christians. A Committee was appointed to collect subscriptions for transmission to Turkey, and to request the Government to allow the Collectors of Districts to receive the money subscribed. It is believed that the bulk of the Mohammedans know little and care less about Turkey, and that these meetings are got up by a few agitators.

ACCORDING to the latest Times telegrams from Calcutta the prospects of the crops in Bombay become daily more gloomy. The districts of Khandesh, Nasik, Ahmadnagar, Punah, Sholapur, Kaladgi, and Dharwar, containing a population of nearly six millions, are threatened with severe distress. The local Government estimates that over 200,000 persons must be relieved in three districts alone. It is stated that the monsoon crops have entirely failed, and the absence of rain prevents the sowing of the rabi and winter crops. The collector of Punah reports that not a single blade of grass is visible for miles. The tanks and rivers are drying up; the cattle are dying of starvation. The collector of Sholapur gives a still worse report. The Government has opened relief works, and is employing people in excavating tanks and making roads. It is stated that the Bombay Government has asked the Supreme Government to sanction the immediate commencement of the Dhund and Manwar Railway, which will connect the northern and southern branches of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway above the Ghats, and greatly shorten the route between the Bengal and Madras Presidencies. This line is important in itself, and, as it passes through three of the most severely suffering districts, will serve admirably for relief works. Karnul and some other Madras districts also complain of a deficiency in the crops, but no particulars have yet been received regarding the extent of the failure. Throughout the remainder of the country the harvest prospects are excellent, though heavy rain did some damage in Allahabad and Midnapur.

The following items come from the same source:—

The Viceroy left Simla for Mashobra on Monday, and proceeded to Narkanda on Thursday; he starts thence to-day for the Kulu Valley, and then visits the Punjab Sind frontiers, and goes next to the Kangra Valley, as originally arranged. General Norman acts as President of the Council during the Viceroy's tour.

Sir John Strachey, the new Finance Minister, is expected in India in December. Sir W. Muir leaves at once. Sir John Strachey's appointment would be popular but for his connection with the Income-tax during Lord Mayo's administration; but probably a better man for the post could not be found among purely Indian statesmen.

The report mentioned last week that the Government recalled the British Agent from Kabul on account of the Amir's favourable reception of the Russian Envoy has been contradicted. It is now stated that the Agent, Atta Mohammed Khan, came to India on leave; but no reason is given for his visiting Simla.

The Yarkand Envoy has left Simla. The Government, with its usual reticence regarding foreign affairs, has given no indication of the nature of Preparations for the Delhi assemblage are proceeding rapidly. It is believed that the Amir of Kabul, the Khan of Khelat, and the Rajah of Sikhim will attend. During the assemblage Sindia will give a grand banquet to the Viceroy in honour of the Queen's new title The Bengal Government talks of spending 15,000 rupees on rejoicings in Calcutta. The assemblage will cost about half a million sterling—a startling comment on the lessons of economy which the Government lately has been impressing on its officers. It is generally felt here—adds the Times correspondent—that in the present critical state of the limines, with the prospect of more or less severe famine in Bombay before us, this large expenditure of public money on mere pageautry is a grievous mistake. Some ceremony to mark the Queen's assumption of the imperial title might, perhaps, be advisable, but one on this enormous and costly scale is wholly unnecessary.

It appears from the same informant that the alarming European telegrams of the last few days had some effect in further depressing Government securities, which have been unusually low for six months past. Tea shares, however, are rising, owing to favourable accounts from the Assam and Kachar gardens. This is a remarkably good year for tea, and the quantity exported will greatly exceed that of any former year. The Calcutta wheat trade has had a wonderful rise lately. In 1870 the quantity exported was 2,000 tons; in 1873, 10,000 tons, which fell in 1874 to 8,000 tons, and last year rose to 50,000 tons. This year already 120,000 tons have been exported from Calcutta alone. This wheat is grown chiefly in the Punjab, and is much valued in the English market, mainly on account of its great dryness.

The rumoured appearance of a new disease, called Kotkotia, lately caused a great panic among the natives inhabiting the Calcutta suburbs. According to a Times telegram, it is described as beginning with a tingling sensation in the fingers or toes, and having speedily a fatal termination if not checked at the outset. The treatment consisted in cauterizing and tying a tight ligature round the affected limb on the first appearance of the symptoms. Dr. French, Civil Surgeon of the Twenty-four Pargannals, after a careful inquiry, declared the whole thing was purely imaginary. He found many natives seriously affected by the severe remedies they had adopted, believing themselves attacked.

A MEETING of leading Calcutta Mohammedans to consider the Turkish Question was held at the Nawab Amir Ali's residence on the 14th, when it was resolved that the proceedings of the previous meeting at the Town-hall were disapproved by the Mohammedan community, and that this meeting should have no connection with the former one. It was further resolved that a Turkish relief committee be appointed to collect and remit subscriptions to the Turkish Government, and that addresses be presented to the Queen praying her to maintain the policy hitherto observed by the British Government towards the Porte. About 12,000 rupees were subscribed.

WE are not surprised at the bitterness with which "One of the Aggrieved," writing from India to the Times, resents the charges brought against Anglo-Indians in Lord Lytton's recent Minute on the Fuller Case, and in Lord Salisbury's well-meant address to the students at Cooper's Hill. The two utterances coming so nearly together from such high authorities tended to impress our countrymen at home with the unfounded belief that the bulk of Englishmen in India were "an unhappy mixture of Dombey senior and Mr. Legree." Nothing could be wider of the truth than such a belief, and it is to be regretted that any rash words spoken in high places should have borne fruit so hurtful to the Anglo-Indian character. The "coldness full of injustice" against which Lord Salisbury warned his hearers is much more common among the natives themselves than among the more respectable classes of Englishmen in India. Ill-treatment of native servants is still, for the most part, confined to youths fresh from England and to Europeans of the lowest class. To assume its prevalence among officers and members of the Civil Service is to do a great injustice to a body of gentlemen conspicuous for their kindly and courteous bearing towards the natives at large.

Or the absurd extent to which our countrymen in India are sometimes misrepresented by ill-informed censors at home, a sadly amusing example was furnished lately by the World, in an article to which our notice has been drawn by some of the Indian papers. That journal is nothing, if not amusing; but the amusement in this case has been provoked at the writer's expense. What, for instance, could be more laughable—from the Anglo-Indian point of view—than the following passage?—

his glass of wine at the same counter as the European. Sir Salar Jung whom England just now delights to honour must not enter the same room where the clerk and the shopman sit. It's Highness the Mdarajth of Vizianagram, a prince living in European luxury and elegance, and who is a capital billiard-player, cannot enter the billiard-rooms of Bombay where Europeans do congregate. It is against the rules for natives to be admitted. They might just as well seek admission to the clubs, where they are more than ever looked down upon as "niggers."

What a picture we have here of things as they are not and could not be, and this from a writer who has apparently seen India! Imagine natives of any class drinking wine openly with Europeans in a public room! Imagine a good Mussulman and a great noble like Sir Salar Jung desiring for one moment to enter such a place for a purpose forbidden by the Koran! Think of the Maharajah of Vizianagram, an Indian gentleman of the best type, who mixes freely with English gentlemen at Benares or in Madras, being turned away from the doors of a public billiard-room in Bombay, a city which he has hardly ever visited! And, lastly, imagine an average native gentleman seeking admission into an English club! The writer of this astounding rubbish proceeds to inform us that—

In the Anglo-Indian community the Civil servants are the men who are most overbearing, insulting, and bumptious. Almost every Civil Service clerk in Bombay has his name and "C.S." after it painted on his doorpost. He thinks it a title. Imagine our War Office clerks doing such a thing in England. The Indian Civil Service snob is the snob p v excellence, and his snobbery is snobbery in excelsis. The military are more excusable. Indeed they do not as a rule exhibit snobbery, though sometimes they are tyrannical. Some officers strike natives because they do not get off the pathway; other officers whip coolies because they do not "slaam." "They are a conquered race, and they should feel it." That is the military idea; but then the military keep to themselves, and the natives simply look upon them as the badge of conquest.

The truthfulness of these curious statements is not more striking than the profound knowledge shown in the comparison of an Indian judge or collector with a War-office clerk at home. According to this enlightened and impartial critic, the only class of Englishmen in India comparatively free from the plague of "superlative cadism" consists of "the men of the higher rank in the commercial community." This sad state of things it appears to be the new Viceroy's mission to reform by his own gracious example, as if all his predecessors, from Dalhousie, let us say, to Lords Mayo and Northbrook, had been utterly wanting in the manners that distinguish gentlemen from snobs. It is curious to observe how closely the Anglo Indian, as painted by the World, resembles the same monster as held up to disparagement by the more rabid writers in the Native press. Only, these latter could never have supplied those exquisite touches about refreshment-rooms and clubs.

THE recent death of Mr. Henry Cope, "of Amritsar," in the Punjab, will remind some of our readers of one who " in his time played many parts" on the Anglo-Indian stage. The late Mr. Cope, as the Home News rightly remarks, " was eminently a self-made man. Beginning life as a gunner in the Bengal Artillery, he presently obtained his discharge from the Company's service, and found employment for his pen upon the Delhi Gazette-then edited, we think, by Mr. Place. After a time he left that journal to set up for himself as editor and part owner of a new paper, the Lahore Chronicle." Not long before the Mutiny Mr. Cope exchanged journalism for trade, and invested his savings in trade and agency business, connected chiefly with Kashmir and the Punjab. He took a lively interest in developing the industries of the former province, and at the time of his death was engaged in promoting the Rajah's efforts to establish new branches of trade with England. He has not long survived the lady whom he married some twenty years ago, whose son, Lieut. Sherriff, of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers, died fighting in the early days of the siege of Delhi.

The Report on Sanitary Measures in India in 1874-75 has for the first time been published as a Parliamentary Blue-book, in view of the growing demand for information on Indian sanitary topics. It is a bulky volume of nearly 200 folio pages, but the contents are full of interest for all who care to know what progress India has been making in sanitary matters during the year under review. For the present we can only give a rough outline of the ground gone over in the Report. The first section reviews the sanitary results obtained during the year in the Indian armies, and among the people at large, in the jails, dispensaries, and civil hospitals, as well as the work done by vaccinators; and embodies the latest information about the leading diseases, and the best means of combatting them. still larger part of the book is filled with interesting abstracts of the chief sanitary reports for the year from the different Presidencies and their capitals; and an appendix of some seventy pages contains a great number of memoranda, reports, and other documents illustrating the subject of the report itself. Most of these last are furnished by the Army Sanitary Commission as comments on the reports received from India; but there is also an interesting letter from Mr. Schrottky on the drainage of Bombay, followed by an extract from the "Indian Annals of Medical Science" on the Cholera Epidemic of 1873 in the American Union.

UNDER the title of "The Fall of the Moghul Empire," Messrs. Allen and Co. have just brought out a new edition of Mr. H. G. Keene's well-written, careful, and scholarly sketch of the "Moghul Empire from the Death of Aurungzeb," published a few years ago. The present Essay, as its author calls it, may almost claim to be regarded as a new work, so carefully has it been corrected, rearranged, and amplified throughout.
